

BUKTI KORESPONDENSI
ARTIKEL JURNAL TER-INDEX SINTA 2

Judul Artikel : Contesting Identity through the Market: tourism and the indigenous movement in Kasepuhan Ciptagelar, West Java
Jurnal : IBDA, Jurnal Kajian Islam dan Budaya UIN Saizu Purwokerto, Vol. 21 No 1 2023, halaman 37-56
Penulis : Nur Widiyanto, Rindha Widyaningsih, Suhartapa

No	Perihal	Tanggal
1	Bukti Korespondensi submission acknowledgement & manuscript 1	7 Februari 2023
2	Bukti Korespondensi keputusan revisi dan revised article	15 Februari 2023
3	Bukti Korespondensi accept submission, lanjut proofreading	2 Maret 2023
4	Bukti Korespondensi 4 hasil proofreading	1 April 2023. 07.03 AM
5	Bukti Korespondensi revisi pasca proofreading (minor) dan revised article	1 April 2023, 14.44 PM
6	Bukti Korespondensi accepted revision	8 April 2023

Bukti Korespondensi 1 (Submission Acknowledgment and Manuscript 1)

Ahmad Muttaqin ahmadmuttaqin@uinsaizu.ac.id via sendinblue.com to me

Tue, Feb 7, 8:41AM ☆ ↶ ⋮

Nur Widiyanto:

Thank you for submitting the manuscript, "Contesting Identity through The Market: Tourism and Indigenous Cultural Movement in Kasepuhan Ciptagelar, West Java " to IBDA : Jurnal Kajian Islam dan Budaya. With the online journal management system that we are using, you will be able to track its progress through the editorial process by logging in to the journal web site:

Manuscript URL: <https://ejournal.uinsaizu.ac.id/index.php/ibda/authorDashboard/submission/7781>
Username: nanung_widiyanto

If you have any questions, please contact me. Thank you for considering this journal as a venue for your work.

IBDA': Jurnal Kajian Islam dan Budaya
P-ISSN: 1693-6736; E-ISSN: 2477-5517
DOI: 10.24090/ibda.vxix.xxxx
Vol. xx, No. xx, month year, page xx-xx

Contesting Identity through The Market;
Tourism and Indigenous Cultural Movement in Kasepuhan Ciptagelar, West
Java

Nur Widiyanto
Tinggi Pariwisata Ambarrukmo Yogyakarta
Ring Road Timur 52B, Modalan, Banguntapan, Bantul, Daerah Istimewa Yogyakarta
55198

nurwidiyanto@stipram.ac.id

Sekolah
Jl. Ahmad Yani,
Banguntapan, Bantul, Daerah Istimewa Yogyakarta
Email:

Rindha Widyaningsih
Islam Negeri Saifuddin Zuhri Purwokerto Jl. Jend. A. Yani No. 40-A Purwokerto Jawa
Tengah 53126

rindha.widyaningsih@uinsaizu.ac.id

Universitas
Purwokerto Jawa
Email:

Suhartapa
Sekolah Tinggi Pariwisata Ambarrukmo Yogyakarta
Jl. Ahmad Yani, Ring Road Timur 52B, Modalan,
Banguntapan, Bantul, Daerah Istimewa Yogyakarta 55198
Email: suhartopo@stipram.ac.id

Abstract

The study identifies the interplay between the engagement of Kasepuhan Ciptagelar, an indigenous community inhabiting the stateforest in West Java and tourism development in the area. Practicing local spirituality rooted in an indigenous belief, tatali paranti karuhun, while administratively accepting Islam, the people have been struggling to deal with the majority Sundanese living nearby that practice Islam and the enactment of the national park covering their living space. It studies whether a minority group living in an area endowed with both natural and cultural tourism resources engages tourism as a conscious strategy to deal with policies neglecting them in terms of religious practices and land policy. The ethnographic work shows that contesting identity in tourism also means the readiness to accommodate various outside elements. However, the strategy has led the Halimun Salak National Park authority to declare the area as the “special status area” for performing cultural tourism inside the state park since 2017. It means various rituals and art performances rooted in the old Sundanese spirituality which is not officially recognized can be freely performed for the sake of tourism. In this case, the community is not only passive in dealing with external forces but also has produced their silent productivity, including with its consequences in several ways.

Keywords: identity, cultural, Ciptagelar, indigenous, Islam, tourism

A. INTRODUCTION

Rich (1999) has described the last few decades as “the decade of failure” marked by political change in the management of natural resources, resulting in the dispossession of indigenous communities from their lands. These have triggered various social movements according to many ecological and socio-cultural impacts. The basic demand of these movements is to get more respect for collective rights to land and cultural identity (Gray, 1997; Moniaga, 2007). Moreover, Jason Clay in Gedicks (2001) and Shiva (1998) have noted that the 20th century as the age of development has witnessed more extinction of indigenous people than any other in history. Indigenous communities have been driven away from the public discussion while outside forces exploit their home ground. In Borneo, it is sadly described by the voice of one of the indigenous people inhabiting Meratus Mountains by emphasizing; “Better you had brought me a bomb, so I could blow this place up” (Tsing, 2005). Moreover, the exclusion of the indigenous community is identified into four types of discrimination; limited access to their own environment, having no legal justification to practice local belief, losing form of citizen rights and losing spaces of living because their land is claimed as state land (Irianto, 2016).

One of the indigenous communities in Indonesia that also has been facing a series of discrimination is Kasepuhan Ciptagelar. This group is a traditional agrarian Sundanese group consisting of around 30.000 people inhabiting the area surrounding f Mount Halimun-Salak National Park in Sukabumi, West Java, including 150 households inhabiting Ciptagelar, an enclave area within state park’s boundary. Kasepuhan is considered a part of Sunda Wiwitan, a common term to categorize the old tradition of Sundanese. The term “wiwitan” is rooted in “awit or wiwit” which can be interpreted as “the beginning”, meaning different from contemporary Sundanese practice, mostly Islam. According to the official number, the population of Sunda Wiwitan’s followers reaches around 100.000 people in West Java. However, this is a small number when it is compared to West Java’s total population which is about 48.600.000 and almost 45, 1 million people (97%) are Muslim (BPS, 2020). Thus, from the religious perspective, people in Ciptagelar are often considered as “deviant” through practicing indigenous spirituality while accepting to be administratively Muslim. In terms of land issues, the government policy of establishing the 40.000 hectares of Mount Halimun area as a national park in 1992 has directly brought the people to be categorized as illegal inhabitants of their own land. Moreover, the extension of the national park area to more than 113.000 hectares in 2003 has totally taken all settlement area, community forest and agricultural land in Ciptagelar to be within the state forest boundary (Widiyanto, 2019).

This study presents an analysis of Kasepuhan resistance toward external forces by taking tourism as the selected ground. Interestingly, the resistance is conducted without any violence which represents a “harmony ideology”. In the past, indigenous communities in Indonesia were referred to as; “isolated community” and tended to be perceived as “uncivilized” (Koentjaraningrat, 1993). In fact, these groups have made long-standing contact with the outside world, including the market and colonial powers (Topatimasang, 2004). Before the arrival of colonial powers, customary practices or adat was considered as a social entity united by particular customs, rituals, and practices of social life (Royer et al., 2015). Then, through fixing landscapes on maps, the colonial government imposed various stereotypes on indigenous groups in order to get control over them (Peluso & Vandergeest, 2001). After the independence, economic growth has become the main agenda and indigenous groups are designated as a challenge to capitalistic principle and an obstacle to economic growth desire (Dove, 1985; Li, 2000).

This ethnographic study views that in terms of religious dynamics and the struggle to regain customary land, minority groups are not powerless and passive. Dusun community in Sabah Malaysia has accepted Christianity and Islam as the formal religion, however, they keep local spirituality momolianism as the identity of the group (Widiyanto & Agra, 2019). Mutaqin (2014) identifies that another Sunda Wiwitan group in Kuningan has taken two different tactics in dealing with state policies; the “front stage” and “backstage” strategy.<sup>1</sup> In the nearby province, Central Java, Aboge (Alif Rebo Wage) community in Banyumas consciously presents its locality by preserving panginyongan as the counter-discourse to the Javanese mainstream culture (Muttaqin & Noor, 2022). In a similar vein, this study focuses on the further step of the “front stage” strategy selected by Kasepuhan Ciptagelar to open opportunities for cultural revivalism and fulfil the demand of establishing tourism agenda. Moreover, revivalism is being taken based on evidence that in the last few years, Kasepuhan has been successfully increasing its ability to express cultural identity through tourism as its arena. However, according to Kathleen Adam on Torajan’s engagement with tourism in South Sulawesi, identity can be effectively negotiated through tourism, but it also brings various negative impacts to the existence of local identity (Kathleen M. Adams, 1997).

B. METHOD AND MATERIAL

The aim of this study is to analyze the interplay between the effort of Kasepuhan Ciptagelar to strengthen their cultural identity rooted in a local belief, tatali paranti karuhun and tourism development in the area. Kasepuhan is chosen for its strong engagement with tourism which is not only for gaining steady economic benefit from the industry but also for its cultural's aim. Ethnographic method to understand the phenomenon from the people's point of view has been carried out as the frame of the research through a series of fieldwork involving participant observation, in-depth interviews completed by the secondary data analysis (Spradley, 1975). Therefore, it needs the intimate association with informants to interpret significant symbols, emotions, understanding and the statement of underlying regularities of human experience. Thus, the informants are selected based on particular considerations, especially their involvement in the various cultural practices both in the past and present.

---

<sup>1</sup> The front stage is the pretense of converting to the formal religion, and at the back stage, they practice their local belief.

Findings from the participant's observations and in-depth interviews were crosschecked to find out the common understanding of collective memory for their cultural practices in the past and how these have been changed in the present days. The final stage was cross-analyzing particular similarities and differences in cultural practices to establish the pattern of engagement between Kasepuhan and tourism. The analysis has been started by identifying several key themes taken from both primary and secondary data. Secondary data provides the history of Kasepuhan and the external forces influencing their cultural and religious practices. It is combined with primary data describing the collective memory about their cultural practices in the past. According to the fact that informants' memory might be un-uniform, these findings are narrowed down to generate a new thematic structure until the differences could be identified. Furthermore, all data are interpreted to find the relationship, similarity and structure to develop the framework of the people's spirituality rooted in their indigenous religions and its relation with tourism development in the area.

C. RESULT AND DISCUSSION

1. Kasepuhan under the shadow of giants

a. Tatali paranti karuhun; a constant target to purify

In the early period of Indonesian independence, the rivalry between the Islamic and secular groups was represented by the political race between Masyumi and PNI, followed by the emergence of the Indonesian Communist Party-PKI (Ricklefs, 2017). This ideological race was continued until the end period of Sukarno's administration by the establishment of a government board; Pengawas Aliran Kepercayaan Masyarakat (PAKEM) to protect the majority religions from the "negative" influence of the non-religion belief, and to control the existence of those beliefs. The ultimate marker of the state's control over local beliefs was the enactment of Law No. 1/PNPS/1969 stated only six religions which are legally recognized; Islam, Christian-Protestant, Catholic, Buddhism, Hinduism and Konghuchu (Ricklefs, 2017). This is the basic support for various discriminations against indigenous beliefs, including the people in Ciptagelar. In a similar vein, although The Constitutional Court decision in 2016 has announced a legal decision to the local beliefs to have equal rights with the official religions, in fact, they are still viewed differently and have to struggle to get more recognition.

During the period of the former leader, Abah Anom there were two “hottest issues” colouring the daily life of the group; the extension of the national park boundary and the relationship with Islamic community nearby. It is commonly known that since the 1960’s administratively people in Kasepuhan administratively accepted Islam and practised it in their own way. It means Islam has been accepted as a formal religion, however, - “tatali paranti karuhun” taken as the main spiritual guidance<sup>2</sup>. This world view mainly located on the idea that there is the upper world where the gods exist and the micro or profane world where human beings live that should be always connected in everyday life. The only figure connecting these two different worlds is abah as the cultural leader. In daily life, this is represented by the obligation to conduct a ritual led by abah to get permission from ancestor before starting the agricultural activity, building houses, marriage, going to other places and any others. According to Ki Absor, one of the elder group members, Religion is located in the heart, therefore does no need to regularly pray five times a day, or fast during Ramadhan. The most important thing from the religion is considered “safety”, Islam means “salamat”, safety. Safety means safe in daily life by getting a good paddy harvest and the only way is by following customary rules; following “abah” as a cultural leader.

However, the people living in Ciptagelar cannot be associated with a single entity in terms of religious life; there are at least four different types related to the dynamics between Islam and “tatali paranti karuhun”:

- a. The members who strongly hold “tatali paranti karuhun” as the main guideline or the “jiwa jero” (inner soul) and merely take Islam as the administrative matter. The numbers of this group are limited to those living in “lembur jero” (inner village) Ciptagelar.

---

<sup>2</sup> Besides tatali paranti karuhun, people use “agama karuhun” or “selam” -rooted in “Islam” to describe their religious practices, meanwhile Sunda Wiwitan is commonly used by the outsiders

- b. The members who practice both of tatali paranti karuhun and Islam; interchangeably practicing adat and Islam. It includes those who live in the villages surrounding lembur jero and other neighbouring regencies such as Lebak and Bogor. The numbers of this group are the majority; however, it is difficult to be precisely estimated.
- c. Those who no longer hold “tatali paranti karuhun” or totally purified to Islam, but still admit themselves as part of Kasepuhan and admit abah as a cultural leader. The number is also a minority, but it is hard to be precisely accounted.
- d. Those having roots in Kasepuhan culture but totally converted to Islam and no longer have any spiritual bond to Kasepuhan, including no longer admitting abah as a cultural leader.

The position of abah is central in uniting these different types of Kasepuhan members. He acts as the umbrella for all Kasepuhan's members, therefore the interaction between different types do not occur in conflicted ways. It means that all types are accepted and respected, as long as the central cultural core which is admitting the existence of the cultural leader still tightly held. Thus, the dynamics and debates between the different types usually occur at the hidden area and never come out to the public area.

In the last few decades, the “adat spirituality” is still dominating the daily life of people in Ciptagelar; there are no local people doing shalat including in Friday's prayer. Interestingly, people also actively use “Islamic words” such as; “alhamdulillah or bismillah”. Many members believe that religious issue is not interesting issue to discuss because it could disturb the harmony of the group. During my fieldwork in Ciptagelar, I regularly meet Gafur, an “ojek” driver who usually takes me from the nearest city, Cisolok. He keeps questioning my motive to visit Ciptagelar which is a strange thing for him. Gapur notes that visiting Ciptagelar which takes around 2,5 hours by motorcycle from the coastal area is not a useful thing. Besides it is hard to cross the jungle in the hilly areas, Gapur emphasizes that the people are still primitive and practice black magic. There are no people doing shalat in Ciptagelar, and he advises for never breaking the adat's rules in Ciptagelar. However, Gapur also recognizes that Seren Taun, a harvest festival conducted by the group is a popular yearly event attracting many visitors both foreign and domestic. On my returned way after visiting Kasepuhan, I bought a meal at a seafood stall in Pelabuhan Ratu, the capital of the regency. The seller, a woman wearing a veil simply asked; “Did you see any people doing “sholat” there?”, directly after I told her that I just visited Ciptagelar. It represents the common image to the people in Ciptagelar that practice a different spirituality within the predominantly Islamic society.

The acceptance of Islam as a “formal” religion in Ciptagelar is a fruit of the dynamic relationship with the majority Islamic society, and also the state. However, at a practical level, Islam becomes the second option proven by the fact when the community conducted the “ngembangkeun” ritual, a pilgrimage to the grave of Abah Anom in the hill namely Pangapungan. It was Friday, and Muslims should go to the mosque to attend the weekly prayer, however, all people who gathered at the ritual missed the Jumat prayer, including Ki Amil who is an Islamic representation within the community. The pilgrimage led by Abah Ugi who replaced his father in 2007 as a cultural leader is to ask permission from the ancestors to start welcoming the harvest period and preparing the biggest festival, Seren Taun. Ki Amil consciously notes that adat agenda should be the first priority rather than the other things.

The acceptance of Islam is the frontstage strategy to deal with larger external forces and furthermore, to maintain the existence of the religion of the ancestors. In the period 1957’s, Kasepuhan were often attacked by the Islamic rebellion group; DI/TII because considered the enemy of Islamic values. However, the administrative acceptance of Islam might be connected to the enactment of the PNPS Law No.1/1965 considering only 5 “worlds religion” recognized by the state and followed by TAP MPR NO IV/1978 which located indigenous beliefs, not as the recognized religion. The other reason is the feeling of being under pressure that their belief is not the “religion” as defined by the state. In a similar vein, it is also connected to the basic nature of the Kasepuhan leadership which is usually open to the selected changes coming from the outside. The political situation post-1965- clash emphasizing that people who did not have any religions could be attributed to the communist was another pressure (Webb, 1986).

In the contemporary Kasepuhan, all members have been obligated to be administratively Muslim. However, it does not mean that the pressure from outside Islamic groups is ended. The majority of Islamic groups from surrounding areas tend to perceive that Islamic practices in Kasepuhan are combined with various elements of “animism”. Furthermore, it has brought the people in “lembur jero” Ciptagelar as a permanent target to be “purified”. The regular visit of “tabligh” groups from neighbouring cities to purify them is strong evidence. The arrival of these groups has been started during the period of the previous leader, Abah Anom, or before 2007. In a few cases, these groups did not come first to Abah for getting permission but directly stayed in the mushola. These facts show that until nowadays, the local spirituality of tatali paranti karuhun in Ciptagelar exists under the shadow of the state and also the majority groups.

b. Kasepuhan and Land Tenure’s Right

The government’s decision to extend Halimun Salak National Park area from 40.000 to 113.000 hectares in 2003 is the other hottest issue in Kasepuhan. It was continued by the statement claiming that people living in the national park area are illegal inhabitants. However, people in Kasepuhan do not resist this policy as long as it would not disturb their settlement, traditional forest area and agricultural lands, particularly planting paddy as the core of cultural pattern. The enactment of national parks is also considered a part of the state’s consolidation during the New Order regime to accelerate its domination of natural resources (Moniaga, 2007). However, the new regime only continues policies enacted by colonial powers, including in Mount Halimun Salak’s areas. There is nothing new, including the zoning system of the national park is strongly related to the policy which was previously designed in the colonization period.

In the early 1700’s the Dutch, Vereenigde Oost-Indische Compagnie (VOC) started to introduce Agrarische Wet to change Halimun forest area into tea plantation zone and also rubber areas in the southern part. It was continued in the period of 1865 to 1942 through enacting all areas above 1570 meters from sea level as protected areas for conservation purposes. It was the beginning of the land conflict between Kasepuhan with state forest management under Dutch authority (Gamma et al., 2005). This policy is replicated by the Indonesian government by giving authority to the Forestry Department to control the areas. Thus, in a letter from the Agricultural Minister in 1978, the government declared forest areas in Mount Halimun, Mount Kendang, Mount Sanggabuana, Mount Nanggung and Ciampea which covered almost 40.000 hectares to be under the conservation board of BKSDA, and the other 73.357 hectares were managed by Perhutani for the production forest (Gamma et al., 2005). This policy was effective until 1992 when by the minister letter No.282/1992 the 40.000 hectares area was changed to be under Halimun National Park. It was extended to 113.357 in 2003, and became Halimun-Salak National Park, covering all areas of Kasepuhan Ciptagelar's traditional settlements, rice barns and agricultural land to be within the state forest area.

Policies over the Halimun-Salak forest both designed by the Dutch and Indonesian governments share a thing in common; neglecting the existence of Kasepuhan living in the area for hundred years. The history of Kasepuhan is related to a group of warriors from Pajajaran Kingdom namely "baris pangawinan" led by Demang Haur Tangtu. After Pajajaran was beaten by the Islamic power in 1579, he was ordered by King Siliwangi to save a sacred flower, hanjuang bodas and decided to move to the southern part of Halimun area. This first movement inherits the important and sacred ritual for the present Kasepuhan; ngalalakon or ngumbara. Until today, people believe that they are the descendants of Demang Haur Tangtu with his wife, Nini Tundarasa. The movement of "ngumbara" or "ngalalakon" is the process to relocate the settlements, rice barns and also agricultural lands guided by the ancestor's spirit through the cultural leader. Moreover, it is also considered as the process to find a land namely uga lebak cawene; a sacred and secret land providing prosperities according to the advice of legendary Sundanese king; Siliwangi. According to Aki Karma, a member of the elder group, ngalalakon is the effort to find emptiness through beginning a new life in a new emptier area which is in a local term called "ngalasuwung". Throughout the history of the group, this ritual has been conducted 19 times until the last movement in 2001 from Ciptarasa located at outside of the national park area to the current Ciptagelar.

In fact, this traditional migration is considered the mechanism to adjust to several ecological, political and demographic aspects, including to survive the domination of Islamic power (Dong, 2020; Putri et al., 2017). At this point, the movement has become the main problem in terms of forest protection purposes. When people in Kasepuhan perceive ngalalakon as a spiritual calling, on the contrary, the authority emphasizes as a strategy to go deeper occupying forest areas. Within this circumstance, indigenous identity, cultural distinctiveness, local beliefs and livelihood practices are often located as the problems (Li, 2000). In the last few years, ngalalakon is seen as one of the central problems within the national park authority-Kasepuhan's relation, besides the Kasepuhan's settlement within the national park area. Thus, along the history of the colonial powers and the Indonesian government, Kasepuhan cultural practices have been under the domination of the state and also the majority Islamic group.

2. Tourism; a new ground for identity expression

The history of tourism development in Indonesia can be traced back to the period of the New Order, when tourism was also aimed to build national consciousness. Moreover, before the outbreak of Covid-19, tourism is expected as the backbone for socioeconomic progress across the country. However, the interplay between indigenous movements and tourism development is rare to be studied. Heffner (1999) provides the example of a hilly society in Tengger in East Java that has produced a hybrid identity between the Tenggerese and the predominantly Muslim society in the Bromo tourism area. During the 1970s, the Ainu in Japan used tourism; including crafts for tourists and cultural tourism as the central process in the reconstruction of Hawaiian and Ainu's identity (Friedman, 2000). It is connected to, different from those suspecting that placing identity on the market would have a de-authenticating effect, but also encompassed for the revival of the traditional way of life. After struggling for years and then engaging in the booming of tourism, nowadays contemporary Hawaiians do not need to advertise their local culture (Friedman, 2000).

Moreover, Trupp (2011) describes an unequal representation by taking an example of 'human zoos' as 'exceptional in combining exhibition, performance, education and domination'. Trupp also emphasizes that though the era of colonial human zoos had ended in the 1940s, similar power relations in the context of modern 'ethnic tourism' still exist (Trupp, 2011). In Indonesia, Picard (1996) emphasizes "cultural tourism" to describe further engagement between culture and tourism. Moreover, Picard notes that Balinese culture is renowned for its dynamic resilience based on its ability to borrow external influences, including tourism, which suit them while maintaining its identity. Meanwhile, Nordholt (2007) provides Balinese's strategy to take tourism as the important livelihood system while locating tradition as the inner culture and tourism as the outer. Similarly, indigenous tourism is offered as an alternative avenue to re-claim their cultural-religious identity and land tenure (Carr, 2016). Meanwhile, by taking Madidi National Park in Bolivia, Ruhanen & Whitford (2019) poses that preserving local culture and the conservation should be put as two the of central objectives of the ecotourism industry.

Neglected in terms of local beliefs practices and customary lands right, Kasepuhan Ciptagelar has taken tourism as a new ground for expressing a distinctive cultural identity. In this case, cultural practices and indigenous beliefs are something which is inseparable and represented through the traditional paddy planting activities (Kusdiwanggo, 2016). Thus, in the last few years these authentic customary practices have been considered as important cultural capital and also a valuable resource to engage tourism. Franz von Benda-Beckmann and Beckmann & Benda-Beckmann (2011), emphasize adat law as “the totality of the rules of conduct for natives and foreign oriental that has, on the one hand, sanctions and on the other, are not codified”. Kasepuhan’s social rules are internally applied to community members and enacted for daily life; dressing style, settlement, forest and agricultural land management, including how to give respect to the leader and so forth. As a communal society, forest areas, agricultural land and paddy field are considered as communal resources. Rice is seen as a sacred being, often viewed as the source of life, planted with full of respect and forbidden to sell. In lembur jero, rice is also should be cooked by using tungku, a traditional stove and firewood. Similar to the national park’s forest zoning, traditionally forest area is divided into three categories: (a) leuweung tutupan which is forbidden to be exploited, (b) leuweung titipan, which can be used depending on the permit from abah and (c) leuweung bukaan; which can be used for human activities without any extension.

Different from the state law, these traditional law does not have strong direct punishment; those who break the law will not be given any direct punishment (Higgins-Desbiolles et al., 2022). Punishment is believed will be established through; getting sick, having a long period of nightmares, crop failure and the worst one; sudden death. The only way to avoid punishment from the ancestor is by going to the leader, admitting the mistake and asking for an apology. In Kasepuhan, abah is the central figure which represents the whole society, or in another word, the cultural leader is the adat law itself. This social rule is transformed from generation to generation through fairy tales, local myths and rituals. Cultural practices also cannot be separated from other sociocultural activities, including cultural performances which are today considered as the tourist attractions (Buzinde et al., 2020; Fang, 2020). Shortly, various rituals and cultural performances are the symbols of Sundanese identity and the adat establishment itself. Kathleen M. Adams,s study (1997) on Sherpa’s identity formation in Himalaya can be used to view the construction of Kasepuhan's identity based on the inside root and the demand to symbolically impress outsiders. Moreover, this struggle for authenticity is canalized by negotiation between self-identification and the possibilities offered by the capitalist market. Ciptagelar today is being seen and acts as the symbol of the authenticity of Sundanese culture for the young generation.

In the last few decades, tourism is viewed as the engine of economic growth and a tool of development in the world's less-developed countries (Curtin & Bird, 2022; Dolezal & Trupp, 2015; Honey, 1999). The combination of various natural and cultural resources has positioned Ciptagelar to be a perfect place for escaping from the city, to be a hidden "Shangri-la". Activities such as bird watching, jungle trekking, off-road, camping, cycling or taking photography are usually done in forest areas, rivers, and paddy fields surrounding the village. Meanwhile, cultural resources are drawn from indigenous beliefs through traditional ceremonies, rituals, traditional architecture, myths and local rules. There is no retribution ticket, but usually, the visitor will leave the amount of money for food and accommodation. Tourism activity is not merely a profit-oriented business; therefore, it cannot be measured from the professional tourism development rooted from profit-making.

Figure.1. Foreign tourist during Seren Taun harvest festival.

David Henley and Jamie S. Davidson (2008) identify there are four roots of adat revivalism in Indonesia; first, international influences, second; democratization and decentralization post New Order's era, third; the oppression during New Order administration and fourth; the positive historical role of adat since the beginning of Indonesian nationalism. The oppression in term of religious life and national park policy has demanded Kasepuhan to find out a way to survive, including their traditional agriculture on their customary land. International influences also play its role in establishing Kasepuhan's cultural movement. In 2000s few members of Kasepuhan actively engaged with indigenous people's federation in Indonesia; Aliansi Masyarakat Adat Nusantara (AMAN) to build a network in advocating religious issues and to gain legal recognition for customary land. Coincidentally, after the establishment of micro-hydroelectric power in the 2000's facilitated by one national NGO, the flow of people coming was significantly increasing. This is the "turning point" and they are smartly using the opportunity to establish a new arena for expressing cultural identity.

The new era of Indonesia's democratization in 1998 arrived to be an opportunity, along with the demand to fulfil the global market of tourism. Using this ground, Kasepuhan started to leave the confrontational and returned to the accommodative strategy by focusing on cultural tourism. They considered the confrontational strategy as ineffective, thus started decreasing their engagement with AMAN's network. The strategy has brought the community to openly begin conducting various rituals and ceremonies that are accessible to outsiders. Interestingly, the people refuse to categorize it as "tourism" nor Ciptagelar as a tourism destination. "We are not promoting tourism; instead, we are maintaining our culture and tradition. But if people come as a tourist, they are welcome", one elite member emphasizes during the Seren Taun harvest festival.

In the last few years, the biggest harvest festival seren taun has become a popular tourist attraction attended by visitors both domestically and from foreign countries. The promotion can be easily found on the internet, social media, and government office including at the national park website. Interestingly, within the uncertain relationship with the national park authority, people built two traditional guest houses that can be used by national park officers when they visit Ciptagelar. This is the ultimate evidence of the accommodative strategy in using tourism as its medium. In a similar vein, Kasepuhan Ciptagelar also serves as a perfect arena to fulfil a "root syndrome" for the young Sundanese living in the cities. Recently, I met a few young Sundanese from Jakarta who came to form new ties to "the original Sundanese" represented by the Kasepuhan. They wore traditional Sundanese clothes and carefully listened to the story from local people about the history of the legendary Sundanese king in the past; Siliwangi.

The trajectory of tourism in Ciptagelar has been started in 2000-s during the era of the former leader, Abah Anom. He was recognized as a spiritual advisor and had a wide range of networks, thus a lot of guests visited the area to meet abah. After completing “ngalalakon” from Ciptarasa area to the current Ciptagelar in 2001, the harvest festival seren taun transformed to be open for the public. It directly triggers the increase of people coming to Ciptagelar, not only for spiritual purposes but also to enjoy its natural and cultural attractiveness. The second period is marked by the effort of the new leader in 2007, Abah Ugi to continue taking tourism as a ground to maintain a better network with other parties. Moreover, the new leader who is familiar with modern electronic devices even strategically takes tourism as the arena to expose Kasepuhan identity to wider audiences both through exposing the harvest festival and the daily tourism activities. Since 2010s, weekly visits can reach 50 people and the harvest festival in 2019 was attended by more than 1000 visitors who stayed in Ciptagelar. Local and national politicians also start to consider Kasepuhan Ciptagelar for its political capital, and then regularly visit several cultural events to connect themselves with the crowds. In a similar vein, through the intensive engagement with tourism, people in Ciptagelar had confidently started to declare that they have a different way of practicing Islam. Ki Absor argues that people also need a normal life and tourism provides the best way without devastating forests and local beliefs inherited from their ancestors. It explains why tourism is seen as a promising choice while keeps refusing to declare Ciptagelar as “a tourism area”, but an adat area.

On the one hand, tourism has triggered the community to produce strategies to adapt to external forces (Holder et al., 2022), as it is emphasized by Robertson (1995) with the term “glocalization”, but on the other, it has also brought various changes. Longchar (2014) argues that commercially oriented tourism is one of the most popular instruments of globalization and potentially does not give enough respect to life, culture and the environment. Meanwhile, Cohen (2013) emphasizes that tourism as a popular vehicle for globalization has brought the elimination of barriers. It also inevitably brings various changes to Ciptagelar. A local person, A (pseudonym) secretly criticized the leader for being too busy with his laptop, rather than building a close interaction with his people. Another critical young man, B openly criticized visitors who were physically “too close” with Abah Ugi, even hugging him. For the local people abah, is a respected figure who should be untouchable, but visitors break this rule. He also criticizes travel agents who often “sell” cultural tours to Ciptagelar with high prices, but only give a small portion to the local people. Lastly, he strongly criticized his people who now appear to be “money-oriented” by counting every activity with the visitors with the amount of money.

Nowadays, Kasepuhan uses in-out strategy to maintain its distinctive identity. Out-strategy is conducted by promoting cultural tourism to as much as wider audiences, meanwhile, in-strategy to internally strengthen Kasepuhan identity by conducting various rituals to unite its members. Tourism as a ground of cultural expression reached its ultimate goal when the provincial government declares the area as the major tourism area in West Java. Moreover, since 2017 the national park authority has attended the harvest festival and stated Ciptagelar as a “special” cultural tourism area in Halimun Salak National Park Area. It brings a strong message: the people are legally settling there. In terms of religious practices, having been considered as a valuable tourist attraction, various rituals rooted in local beliefs can be freely practised, and moreover facilitates the hegemony of the beliefs over the Islamic influences in the area. It means that tourism has provided a sort of political opportunity for the indigenous community to express their cultural distinctive and also better recognition of their customary land which is central to maintaining its culture.

E. CONCLUSION

Borrowing James (2010), the fundament of this study is the effort of people from the ‘peripheries’ represented by the effort of Kasepuhan Ciptagelar to preserve their cultural identity. Kasepuhan is not merely passive in dealing with external forces, but actively producing daily strategies to survive, including through taking tourism as its ground. In the last few decades, Kasepuhan has been denied in terms of freedom to practice local beliefs and neglected from the ancestral land by the enactment of the national park. Accepting Islam as the formal religion but limiting its values in daily life and favor tatali paranti karuhun is the accommodative strategy to deal with the Islamic majority groups. Interestingly, nowadays Kasepuhan arrives at the point to engage with tourism itself to obtain the bigger recognition for their cultural practices. Consciously taking tourism as its avenue, Kasepuhan has resisted colonial power, the modern state and the dominant role of the majority religious group throughout their history. In a similar vein, admitted for having valuable natural and cultural resources that are needed to support tourism development in the area, various rituals rooted in tatali paranti karuhun can be freely performed. Moreover, in terms of land issues, people in Kasepuhan is no longer considered illegal settlers within the national park boundary. Thus, it represents the idea that Kasepuhan is not powerless; conversely, they have produced hidden productivity in several ways, including with its consequences in several fields.

Bibliography

- Beckmann, F. V. B., & Benda-Beckmann, K. Von. (2011). Myths and Stereotypes about Adat Law: a Reassessment of Van Vollenhoven in The Light of Current Struggle Over Adat Law in Indonesia. 167-2/3; pp 167-195. Bijdragen Tot de Taal-, Land-En Volkunde (BKI), 167(2/3), 167–195.
- BPS. (2020). Provinsi Jawa Barat Dalam Angka. <https://jabar.bps.go.id/publication/2020/04/27/cfab9a400cf304f800182a5f/provinsi-jawa-barat-dalam-angka-2020.html>
- Buzinde, C. N., Manuel-Navarrete, D., & Swanson, T. (2020). Co-producing Sustainable Solutions in Indigenous Communities through Scientific Tourism. Journal of Sustainable Tourism, 28(9), 1255–1271. <https://doi.org/10.1080/09669582.2020.1732993>
- Carr, A. et al. (2016). Indigenous People and Tourism: the Challenge and Opportunities for Sustainable Tourism. Journal of Sustainable Tourism, 24(8–9), 1067–1079.
- Cohen, E. (2013). Globalization, Global Crises and Tourism. Tourism Recreation Research, 37(2), 103–111.
- Curtin, N., & Bird, S. (2022). “We are reconciliators”: When Indigenous tourism begins with agency. Journal of Sustainable Tourism, 30(2–3), 461–481. <https://doi.org/10.1080/09669582.2021.1903908>
- Dolezal, C., & Trupp, A. (2015). Tourism and development in Southeast Asia. Austrian Journal of South-East Asian Studies, 8(2), 117–124. <https://doi.org/10.14764/10.ASEAS-2015.2-1>
- Dong, T. B. (2020). Cultural Tourism: An Ethnographic Study of Home Stay in Briddim Village, Nepal. The Gaze: Journal of Tourism and Hospitality, 11(1), 10–36. <https://doi.org/10.3126/gaze.v11i1.26612>
- Dove, M. (1985). Peranan Kebudayaan Tradisional dalam Pembangunan. Yayasan Obor Indonesia.
- Fang, W.-T. (2020). Cultural Tourism BT - Tourism in Emerging Economies: The Way We Green, Sustainable, and Healthy (W.-T. Fang (ed.); pp. 75–101). Springer Singapore. https://doi.org/10.1007/978-981-15-2463-9\_4
- Friedman, J. (2000). Cultural Identity and Global Process. Sage Publications.
- Gamma, G., Sirait, M., N, R., Soenarto, F., & Nurzaman, B. (2005). History of Land-Use Policies and Designation of Mount Halimun-Salak National Park. Jurnal Manajemen Hutan Tropika, XI(1), 1–13.
- Gedicks, A. (2001). Resource Rebel. South End Press.
- Gray, A. (1997). Indigenous Rights and Development: Self-Determination in an Amazonian Community. England.
- Heffner, R. W. (1999). Geger Tengger: Perubahan Sosial dan Perkelahian Politik. LKiS.
- Higgins-Desbiolles, F., Blanchard, L.-A., & Urbain, Y. (2022). Peace Through Tourism: Critical Reflections on the Intersections Between Peace, Justice, Sustainable Development and Tourism. Journal of Sustainable Tourism, 30(2–3), 335–351. <https://doi.org/10.1080/09669582.2021.1952420>
- Holder, A., Walters, G., Ruhanen, L., & Mkono, M. (2022). Exploring tourist’s socio-cultural aversions, self-congruity bias, attitudes and willingness to participate in indigenous tourism. Journal of Vacation Marketing, 13567667221124344. <https://doi.org/10.1177/13567667221124343>

- Honey, M. (1999). Ecotourism and Sustainable Development: Who Owns Paradise? Island Press.
- Irianto, S. (2016). Masyarakat Adat Keindonesiaan. Kompas Daily Magazine. <https://law.ui.ac.id/sulistyowati-irianto-kompas-cetak-masyarakat-adat-keindonesiaan>
- James, S. (2010). The Art of Not Being Governed: An Anarchist History of Upland Southeast Asia. NUS Press.
- Kathleen M. Adams. (1997). Ethnic Tourism and Renegotiation of Tradition in Tana Toraja. Ethnology, 36(4), 309–320.
- Koentjaraningrat. (1993). Masalah Kesukubangsaan dan Integrasi Nasional. Gramedia Pustaka Utama.
- Kusdiwanggo, S. (2016). Konsep Pola Permukiman Spasial di Kasepuhan Ciptagelar. Jurnal Permukiman, 11(1), 29–42.
- Li, T. M. (2000). Articulating indigenous identity in indonesia: Resource politics and the tribal slot. Comparative Studies in Society and History, 42(1), 149–179. <https://doi.org/10.1017/S0010417500002632>
- Longchar, W. (2014). Tourism Industry-An Instrument of Neo-Liberal Economic Project: A Ministerial Challenge. The Asia Journal of Theology, 28(1), 59–69.
- Moniaga, S. (2007). From Bumiputera to Masyarakat Adat: The Revival of Tradition in Indonesian Politics. In D. Davidson, J. and Henley (Ed.), The Deployment of Adat from Colonialism to Indigenism (pp. 275–294). Routledge.
- Mutaqin, Z. Z. (2014). Penghayat, orthodoxy and the legal politics of the state. Indonesia and the Malay World, 42(122), 1–23. <https://doi.org/10.1080/13639811.2014.870771>
- Muttaqin, A., & Noor, N. M. (2022). Local Islam and Javanese Culture Penetration: Muslim Alif Rebo Wage (Aboge) Negotiations in Identity Formation. Ibda': Jurnal Kajian Islam Dan Budaya, 20(1), 110–130.
- Nordholt, H. S. (2007). Bali, Benteng Terbuka 1995-2005: Otonomi Daerah, Demokrasi Electoral dan Identitas Defensive. Pustaka Larasan.
- Peluso, N. L., & Vandergeest, P. (2001). Genealogies of the Political Forest and Customary Rights in Indonesia, Malaysia, and Thailand. The Journal of Asian Studies, 60(3), 761–812.
- Picard, M. (1996). "Cultural Tourism" in Bali: Cultural Performances as Tourist Attraction." Indonesia, 49, pp: 37-74. Archipelago, the University of California.
- Putri, S., Sukirno, & Sudaryatmi, S. (2017). Implikasi Putas Mk Terhadap Eksistensi Hutan Adat Masyarakat Yang Tumpang Tindih Dengan Hutan Konservasi Taman Nasional Gunung Halimun Salak. Diponegoro Law Journal, 6(35), 1–22.
- Rich, B. (1999). Mortgaging the Earth: The World Bank, Environmental Impoverishment and the Crisis of Development. INFID.
- Ricklefs, M. . (2017). Sejarah Indonesia Modern. Gajah Mada University Press.
- Robertson, R. (1995). Glocalization: Time-space and homogeneity-heterogeneity. In Global Modernities (pp. 25–45). Sage Publications, Ltd.
- Royer, S. De, Visser, L. E., Galudra, G., Pradhan, U., & Van Noordwijk, M. (2015). Self-Identification of Indigenous People in Post-Independence Indonesia: A Historical Analysis in the Context of REDD+. International Forestry Review, 17(3), 282–297. <https://doi.org/10.1505/146554815815982648>
- Ruhanen, L., & Whitford, M. (2019). Cultural heritage and Indigenous tourism. Journal of Heritage Tourism, 14(3), 179–191. <https://doi.org/10.1080/1743873X.2019.1581788>
- Shiva, V. (1998). Staying Alive: Women, Ecology and Survival in India. Zed Book Ltd.
- Spradley, J. (1975). Anthropology: The Cultural Perspective. . John Wiley and Sons Inc.

- Topatimasang, R. (2004). Orang Orang Kalah. Insist Press.
- Trupp, A. (2011). Exhibiting the “Other” Then and Now: “Human Zoos” in Southern China and Thailand. ASEAS-Austrian Journal of South-East Asian Studies, 4(1), 139–149. www.ssoar.info
- Tsing, A.-L. (2005). Friction: An Ethnography of Global Connection. Princeton University Press.
- Webb, R. . (1986). The Sickle and the Cross: Christians and Communists in Bali, Flores, Sumba and Timor. Journal of Southeast Asian Studies, 17(1), 94–112.
- Widiyanto, N. (2019). Indigenous Religion Revivalism and Tourism Development in Indonesia and Malaysia (A Study on Kasepuhan Ciptagelar, West Java and Bundu Tuhan Dusun’s Community in Sabah). Universitas Gadjah Mada.
- Widiyanto, N., & Agra, E. (2019). Tourism Development and the New Path of Migration in Sabah, Malaysia. Borneo Research Journal, 13(1), 81–97. <https://doi.org/10.22452/brj.vol13no1.5>

Bukti Korespondensi 2: Keputusan Editor: revisi dan revised article (15 Februari 2023)

Arif Hidayat arif19hidayat88@gmail.com via sendinblue.com
to me, Rindha, Suhartapa ▾

Wed, Feb 15, 9:12AM ☆ ↶ ⋮

Nur Widiyanto, Rindha Widyaningsih; Suhartapa:

We have reached a decision regarding your submission to IBDA : Jurnal Kajian Islam dan Budaya, "Contesting Identity through The Market: Tourism and Indigenous Cultural Movement in Kasepuhan Ciptagelar, West Java".

Our decision is to:

Revision

IBDA: Jurnal Kajian Islam dan Budaya
P-ISSN: 1693-6736; E-ISSN: 2477-5517
DOI: 10.24090/ibda.vvix.xxxx
Vol. xx, No. xx, month year, page xx-xx

Contesting Identity through The Market; Tourism and Indigenous Cultural Movement in Kasepuhan Ciptagelar, West Java

Nur Widiyanto Sekolah
Tinggi Pariwisata Ambarrukmo Yogyakarta Jl. Ahmad Yani,
Ring Road Timur 52B, Modalan, Banguntapan, Bantul, Daerah Istimewa Yogyakarta
55198 Email:
nurwidiyanto@stipram.ac.id

Rindha Widyaningsih Universitas
Islam Negeri Saifuddin Zuhri Purwokerto Jl. Jend. A. Yani No. 40-A Purwokerto Jawa

Tengah 53126

Email:

rindha.widyaningsih@uinsaizu.ac.id

Suhartapa

Sekolah Tinggi Pariwisata Ambarrukmo Yogyakarta
Jl. Ahmad Yani, Ring Road Timur 52B, Modalan,
Banguntapan, Bantul, Daerah Istimewa Yogyakarta 55198
Email: suhartopo@stipram.ac.id

Abstract

The study identifies the interplay between the engagement of Kasepuhan Ciptagelar, an indigenous community inhabiting the state forest in West Java and tourism development in the area. Practicing local spirituality rooted in an indigenous belief, tatali paranti karuhun, while administratively accepting Islam, the people have been struggling to deal with the majority Sundanese living nearby that practice Islam and the enactment of the national park covering their living space. It studies whether a minority group living in an area endowed with both natural and cultural tourism resources engages tourism as a selected ground to deal with policies neglecting them in terms of religious practices and land policy. Employing the ethnographic method, the study has revealed that contesting identity in tourism also means the readiness to accommodate various outside elements. However, the strategy has led the Halimun Salak National Park authority to declare the area as a “special status area” for performing cultural tourism inside the state park since 2017. Thus, the result of the study shows after engaging tourism, various rituals and art performances rooted in the old Sundanese spirituality which is not officially recognized by the state can be freely performed for the sake of tourist’s satisfaction. In this case, the community is not passive in dealing with external forces but also has produced their silent productivity, including with its consequences in several ways.

Keywords: identity, cultural, Ciptagelar, indigenous, Islam, tourism

A. INTRODUCTION

Rich (1999) has described the last few decades as “the decade of failure” marked by political change in the management of natural resources, resulting in the dispossession of indigenous communities from their lands. These have triggered social movements according to many ecological and socio-cultural impacts. The basic demand of these movements is to get more respect for collective rights to land and cultural identity (Gray, 1997; Moniaga, 2007). Moreover, Jason Clay in Gedicks (2001) and Shiva (1998) have noted that the 20th century as the age of development has witnessed more extinction of indigenous people than any other in history. Indigenous communities have been driven away from the public discussion while outside forces exploit their home ground. In Borneo, it is sadly described by the voice of one of the indigenous people inhabiting Meratus Mountains by emphasizing; “Better you had brought me a bomb, so I could blow this place up” (Tsing, 2005). Moreover, the exclusion of the indigenous community is identified into four types of discrimination; limited access to their” own” environment, having no legal justification to practice local belief, losing form of citizen rights and losing spaces of living because their land is claimed as state land (Irianto, 2016).

One of the indigenous communities in Indonesia that also has been facing a series of discrimination is Kasepuhan Ciptagelar. This group is a traditional agrarian Sundanese group consisting of around 30.000 people inhabiting the area surrounding Mount Halimun-Salak National Park in Sukabumi, West Java, including 150 households inhabiting Ciptagelar, an enclave area within state park’s boundary. Kasepuhan is considered a part of Sunda Wiwitan, a common term to categorize the old tradition of Sundanese. The term “wiwitan” is rooted in “awit or wiwit” which can be interpreted as “the beginning”, meaning different from contemporary Sundanese practice, mostly Islam. According to the official number, the population of Sunda Wiwitan’s followers reaches around 100.000 people in West Java. However, this is a small number when it is compared to West Java’s total population which is about 48.600.000 and almost 45, 1 million people (97%) are Muslim (BPS, 2020). Thus, from the religious perspective, people living in Ciptagelar are often considered as “deviant” through practicing indigenous spirituality while accepting to be administratively Muslim. In terms of land issues, the government policy of establishing the 40.000 hectares of Mount Halimun area as a national park in 1992 has directly brought the people to be categorized as illegal inhabitants on their own land. Moreover, the extension of the national park area to more than 113.000 hectares in 2003 has totally taken all settlement area, community forest and agricultural land in Kasepuhan Ciptagelar to be within the state forest boundary (Widiyanto, 2019).

This study presents an analysis of Kasepuhan resistance toward external forces by taking tourism as the selected arena. Interestingly, the resistance is conducted without any violence which represents a “harmony ideology” of the group. In the past, indigenous communities in Indonesia were often referred to as; “isolated community” and tended to be perceived as “uncivilized” (Chakim, 2022; Koentjaraningrat, 1993). In fact, these groups have made a long-standing contact with the outside world, including the market and colonial powers (Topatimasang, 2004). Before the arrival of colonial powers, customary practices or adat was considered as a social entity united by particular customs, rituals, and practices of social life (Royer et al., 2015). Then, through fixing landscapes on maps, the colonial government imposed various stereotypes on indigenous groups in order to get control over them (Peluso & Vandergeest, 2001). After the independence, economic growth has become the main agenda and indigenous groups are designated as a challenge to capitalistic principle and an obstacle to economic growth desire (Dove, 1985; Li, 2000).

This ethnographic study views that in terms of religious dynamics and the struggle to regain customary land, minority groups are not powerless and passive. Dusun community in Sabah Malaysia has accepted Christianity and Islam as the formal religion, however, they keep local spirituality momolianism as the central identity of the group (Widiyanto & Agra, 2019). Mutaqin (2014) identifies that another Sunda Wiwitan group in Kuningan has taken two different tactics in dealing with state policies; the “front stage” and “backstage” strategy.<sup>3</sup> However, according to Kathleen Adam on Torajan’s engagement with tourism in South Sulawesi, identity can be effectively negotiated through tourism, but it also brings various negative impacts to the existence of local identity (Kathleen M. Adams, 1997).

In the nearby province, Central Java, Aboge (Alif Rebo Wage) community in Banyumas consciously presents its locality by preserving panginyongan as the counter-discourse to the Javanese mainstream culture (Muttaqin & Noor, 2022; Widyaningsih, 2017). In a similar vein, this study focuses on the further step of the “front stage” strategy selected by Kasepuhan Ciptagelar to open opportunities for cultural revivalism and fulfil the demand of establishing tourism agenda. Moreover, revivalism is being taken based on evidence that in the last few years, Kasepuhan has been successfully increasing its ability to express cultural identity through tourism as its arena. Thus, different from the other studies that tend to view tourism for its negative influences for local culture, the importance of this research is located on how tourism provides an opportunity for an indigenous group to strengthen their cultural identity and the access on customary land.

B. METHOD AND MATERIAL

The aim of this study is to analyze the interplay between the effort of Kasepuhan Ciptagelar to strengthen their cultural identity rooted in a local belief, tatali paranti karuhun and tourism development in the area. This ethnographic research was carried out in Kasepuhan Ciptagelar, Cisolok District, Sukabumi Regency, West Java and the area of Halimun-Salak National Park since 2017 and regularly updated to the recent years. Kasepuhan is chosen for its strong engagement with tourism which is not only for gaining steady economic benefit from the industry but also for its cultural's aim. Ethnographic method is one of the best way to understand the phenomenon from the people's point of view through a series of fieldwork involving participant observation, in-depth interviews completed by the secondary data analysis (Spradley, 1975). Therefore, it needs the intimate association with informants to interpret significant symbols, emotions, understanding and the statement of underlying regularities of human experience. Thus, the informants are selected based on the involvement in the cultural practices along the history of the group and also their connection to tourism activities; abah as the cultural leader, baris kolot or the elder group, common members of the community, people from the nearby villages, local governments, national park staffs and also visitors coming to Ciptagelar. Meanwhile, secondary data were gathered from various sources; local manuscripts, previous researches, local governments, national park authority and libraries, including from the Leiden University.

---

<sup>3</sup> The front stage is the pretense of converting to the formal religion, and at the back stage, they practice their local belief.

Observation has been employed on various rituals and art performances, interaction between local people and the outsiders, and also among local people, completed by in-depth interview to gain people's perspective on their cultural life. Findings from a series of observations and in-depth interviews were crosschecked to find common understanding of collective memory for cultural practices in the past and how these have been changed in the present days. The final stage was cross-analyzing similarities and differences to establish patterns of the engagement between Kasepuhan and tourism through identifying several key themes from particularly primary data. Furthermore, it was completed by the secondary data providing the history of Kasepuhan and the external forces influencing their cultural and religious practices. According to the fact that informants' memory might be un-uniform, these findings were narrowed down to generate a new thematic structure until the differences could be identified. Finally, all data are interpreted to find the relationship, similarity and structure to develop the framework of the people's spirituality rooted in tatali paranti karuhun and its relation with tourism development in the area.

C. RESULT AND DISCUSSION

1. Kasepuhan under the shadow of giants

a. Tatali paranti karuhun; a constant target to purify

In the early period of Indonesian independence, the rivalry between the Islamic and secular groups was represented by the political race between Masyumi and PNI, followed by the emergence of the Indonesian Communist Party-PKI (Ricklefs, 2017). This ideological race was continued until the end period of Sukarno's administration by the establishment of a government board; Pengawas Aliran Kepercayaan Masyarakat (PAKEM) to protect the majority religions from the "negative" influence of the non-religion belief, and also to control the existence of those beliefs. The ultimate marker of the state's control over local beliefs was the enactment of Law No. 1/PNPS/1969 stated only six religions which are legally recognized; Islam, Christian-Protestant, Catholic, Buddhism, Hinduism and Konghuchu (Ricklefs, 2017). This is the basic support for various discriminations against indigenous beliefs, including to the people in Kasepuhan Ciptagelar. In a similar vein, although The Constitutional Court decision in 2016 has announced a legal decision to the local beliefs to have equal rights with the official religions, in fact, they are still viewed differently and have to struggle to get more recognition.

During the period of the former leader, Abah Anom there were two "hottest issues" colouring the daily life of the group; the extension of the national park boundary and the relationship with Islamic community nearby. It is commonly known that since the 1960's administratively people in Kasepuhan have accepted Islam, however, they practice it in their own way. It means Islam has been accepted as a formal religion, meanwhile, - "tatali paranti karuhun" is taken as the main spiritual guidance in the daily life<sup>4</sup>. This world view mainly located on the idea that there is the upper world where the gods exist and the profane world where human beings live that should be always connected in everyday life. The only figure who is able connecting between these two different worlds is abah as the cultural leader (Widiyanto, 2019). In daily life, this is represented by the obligation to conduct a ritual led by abah to get permission from the ancestors before starting agricultural activity, building houses, marriage, going to other places and any others. According to Ki Absor, one of the elder group members, for the people religion is located in the heart, therefore does not need to regularly pray five times a day, or fast during Ramadhan. The most important thing from the religion is considered "safety", Islam means "salamat", safety (Subur, 2017). Safety means safe in daily life by getting a good paddy harvest and the only way is by following customary rules; following "abah" as a cultural leader.

---

<sup>4</sup> Besides tatali paranti karuhun, people use "agama karuhun" or "selam" -rooted in "Islam" to describe their religious practices, meanwhile Sunda Wiwitan is commonly used by the outsiders

However, the people living in Ciptagelar cannot be associated with a single entity in terms of religious life; there are at least four different types related to the dynamics between Islam and “tatali paranti karuhun”:

- e. The members who strongly hold “tatali paranti karuhun” as the main guideline or the “jiwa jero” (inner soul) and merely take Islam as the administrative matter. The numbers of this group are limited to those living in “lembur jero” (inner village) Ciptagelar.
- f. The members who practice both of tatali paranti karuhun and Islam; interchangeably practicing adat and Islam. It includes those who live in the villages surrounding lembur jero and other neighbouring regencies such as Lebak and Bogor. The numbers of this group are the majority; however, it is difficult to be precisely estimated.
- g. Those who no longer hold “tatali paranti karuhun” or totally purified to Islam, but still admit themselves as part of Kasepuhan and admit abah as a cultural leader. The number is also a minority, but it is hard to be precisely accounted.
- h. Those having roots in Kasepuhan culture but totally converted to Islam and no longer have any spiritual bond to Kasepuhan, including no longer admitting abah as a cultural leader.

The position of abah is central in uniting these different types of Kasepuhan members. He acts as the umbrella for all Kasepuhan's members, therefore the interaction between different types do not occur in conflicted ways. It means that all types are accepted and respected, as long as the central cultural core which is admitting the existence of the cultural leader still tightly held. Thus, the dynamics and debates between the different types usually occur at the hidden area and never come out to the public area.

In the last few decades, the “adat spirituality” is still dominating the daily life of people in Ciptagelar; there are no local people doing shalat including in Friday's prayer. Interestingly, people also actively use “Islamic words” such as; “alhamdulillah or bismillah”. Many members believe that religious issue is not interesting issue to discuss because it could disturb the harmony of the group. During my fieldwork in Ciptagelar, I regularly meet Gafur, an “ojek” driver who usually takes me from the nearest city, Cisolok. He keeps questioning my motive to visit Ciptagelar which is a strange thing for him. Gafur notes that visiting Ciptagelar which takes around 2,5 hours by motorcycle from the coastal area is not a useful thing. Besides it is hard to cross the jungle in the hilly areas, Gapur emphasizes that the people are still primitive and practice black magic. There are no people doing shalat in Ciptagelar, and he advises for never breaking the adat's rules in Ciptagelar. However, Gapur also recognizes that Seren Taun, a harvest festival conducted by the group is a popular yearly event attracting many visitors both foreign and domestic. On my returned way after visiting Kasepuhan, I bought a meal at a seafood stall in Pelabuhan Ratu, the capital of the regency. The seller, a woman wearing a veil simply asked; "Did you see any people doing "shalat" there?", directly after I told her that I just visited Ciptagelar. It represents the common image to the people in Ciptagelar that practice a different spirituality within the predominantly Islamic society.

The acceptance of Islam as a "formal" religion in Ciptagelar is a fruit of the dynamic relationship with the majority Islamic society, and also the state. However, at a practical level, Islam becomes the second option proven by the fact when the community conducted the "ngembangkeun" ritual, a pilgrimage to the grave of Abah Anom in the hill namely Pangapungan. It was Friday, and Muslims should go to the mosque to attend the weekly prayer, however, all people who gathered at the ritual missed the Jumat prayer, including Ki Amil who is an Islamic representation within the community. The pilgrimage led by Abah Ugi who replaced his father in 2007 as a cultural leader is to ask permission from the ancestors to start welcoming the harvest period and preparing the biggest festival, Seren Taun. Ki Amil consciously notes that adat agenda should be the first priority rather than the other things.

The acceptance of Islam is the frontstage strategy to deal with larger external forces and furthermore, to maintain the existence of the religion of the ancestors (Aly, 2015). In the period 1957's, Kasepuhan were often attacked by the Islamic rebellion group; DI/TII because considered the enemy of Islamic values. However, the administrative acceptance of Islam might be connected to the enactment of the PNPS Law No.1/1965 considering only five "worlds religion" recognized by the state and followed by TAP MPR NO IV/1978 which located indigenous beliefs, not as the recognized religion. The other reason is the feeling of being under pressure that their belief is not the "religion" as defined by the state. In a similar vein, it is also connected to the basic nature of the Kasepuhan leadership which is usually open to the selected changes coming from the outside(Widiyanto, 2019). The political situation post-1965- clash emphasizing that people who did not have any religions could be attributed to the communist was another important pressure (Webb, 1986).

In the contemporary Kasepuhan, all members of the group have been obligated to be administratively Muslim. However, it does not mean that the pressure from outside Islamic groups is ended. The majority of Islamic groups from surrounding areas tend to perceive that Islamic practices in Kasepuhan are combined with various elements of “animism”. Furthermore, it has brought the people in “lembur jero” Ciptagelar as a permanent target to be “purified”. The regular visit of “tabligh” groups from neighbouring cities to purify them is a strong evidence. The arrival of these groups has been started during the period of the previous leader, Abah Anom, or before 2007. In a few cases, these groups did not come first to Abah for getting permission but directly stayed in the mushola. These facts show that until nowadays, the local spirituality of tatali paranti karuhun in Ciptagelar exists under the shadow of the state and also the majority groups.

b. Kasepuhan and Land Tenure’s Right

The government’s decision to extend Halimun Salak National Park area from 40.000 to 113.000 hectares in 2003 is the other hottest issue in Kasepuhan. It was continued by the statement claiming that people living in the national park area are illegal inhabitants. However, people in Kasepuhan do not resist this policy as long as it would not disturb their settlement, traditional forest area and agricultural lands, particularly planting paddy as the core of cultural pattern. The enactment of national parks is also considered a part of the state’s consolidation during the New Order regime to accelerate its domination of natural resources (Moniaga, 2007). However, the new regime only continues policies enacted by colonial powers, including in Mount Halimun Salak’s areas. There is nothing new, including the zoning system of the national park is strongly related to the policy which was previously designed in the colonization period.

In the early 1700’s the Dutch, Vereenigde Oost-Indische Compagnie (VOC) started to introduce Agrarische Wet to change Halimun forest area into tea plantation zone and also rubber areas in the southern part. It was continued in the period of 1865 to 1942 through enacting all areas above 1570 meters from sea level as protected areas for conservation purposes. It was the beginning of the land conflict between Kasepuhan with state forest management under Dutch authority (Gamma et al., 2005). This policy is replicated by the Indonesian government by giving authority to the Forestry Department to control the areas. Thus, in a letter from the Agricultural Minister in 1978, the government declared forest areas in Mount Halimun, Mount Kendang, Mount Sanggabuana, Mount Nanggung and Ciampea which covered almost 40.000 hectares to be under the conservation board of BKSDA, and the other 73. 357 hectares were managed by Perhutani for the production forest (Gamma et al., 2005). This policy was effective until 1992 when by the minister letter No.282/1992 the 40.000 hectares area was changed to be under Halimun National Park. It was extended to 113.357 in 2003, and became Halimun-Salak National Park, covering all areas of Kasepuhan Ciptagelar's traditional settlements, rice barns and agricultural land to be within the state forest area.

Policies over the Halimun-Salak forest both designed by the Dutch and Indonesian governments share a thing in common; neglecting the existence of Kasepuhan living in the area for hundred years. The history of Kasepuhan is related to a group of warriors from Pajajaran Kingdom namely "baris pangawinan" led by Demang Haur Tangtu. After Pajajaran was beaten by the Islamic power in 1579, he was ordered by King Siliwangi to save a sacred flower, hanjuang bodas and decided to move to the southern part of Halimun area. This first movement inherits the important and sacred ritual for the present Kasepuhan; ngalalakon or ngumbara. Until today, people believe that they are the descendants of Demang Haur Tangtu with his wife, Nini Tundarasa. The movement of "ngumbara" or "ngalalakon" is the process to relocate the settlements, rice barns and also agricultural lands guided by the ancestor's spirit through the cultural leader. Moreover, it is also considered as the process to find a land namely uga lebak cawene; a sacred and secret land providing prosperities according to the advice of legendary Sundanese king; Siliwangi. According to Aki Karma, a member of the elder group, ngalalakon is the effort to find emptiness through beginning a new life in a new emptier area which is in a local term called "ngalasuwung". Throughout the history of the group, this ritual has been conducted 19 times until the last movement in 2001 from Ciptarasa located at outside of the national park area to the current Ciptagelar.

In fact, this traditional migration is considered the mechanism to adjust to several ecological, political and demographic aspects, including to survive the domination of Islamic power (Dong, 2020; Putri et al., 2017). At this point, the movement has become the main problem in terms of forest protection purposes. When people in Kasepuhan perceive ngalalakon as a spiritual calling, on the contrary, the authority emphasizes as a strategy to go deeper occupying forest areas. Within this circumstance, indigenous identity, cultural distinctiveness, local beliefs and livelihood practices are often located as the problems (Li, 2000). In the last few years, ngalalakon is seen as one of the central problems within the national park authority-Kasepuhan's relation, besides the Kasepuhan's settlement within the national park area. Thus, along the history of the colonial powers and the Indonesian government, Kasepuhan cultural practices have been under the domination of the state and also the majority Islamic group.

2. Tourism; a new ground for identity expression

The history of tourism development in Indonesia can be traced back to the period of the New Order, when tourism was also aimed to build national consciousness. Moreover, before the outbreak of Covid-19, tourism is expected as the backbone for socioeconomic progress across the country. However, the interplay between indigenous movements and tourism development is rare to be studied. Heffner (1999) provides the example of a hilly society in Tengger in East Java that has produced a hybrid identity between the Tenggerese and the predominantly Muslims society in the Bromo tourism area. During the 1970s, the Ainu in Japan used tourism; including crafts for tourists and cultural tourism as the central process in the reconstruction of Hawaiian and Ainu's identity (Friedman, 2000). It is connected to, different from those suspecting that placing identity on the market would have a de-authenticating effect, but also encompassed for the revival of the traditional way of life. After struggling for years and then engaging in the booming of tourism, nowadays contemporary Hawaiians do not need to advertise their local culture (Friedman, 2000).

Moreover, Trupp (2011) describes an unequal representation by taking an example of 'human zoos' as 'exceptional in combining exhibition, performance, education and domination'. Trupp also emphasizes that though the era of colonial human zoos had ended in the 1940s, similar power relations in the context of modern 'ethnic tourism' still exist (Trupp, 2011). In Indonesia, Picard (1996) emphasizes "cultural tourism" to describe further engagement between culture and tourism. Moreover, Picard notes that Balinese culture is renowned for its dynamic resilience based on its ability to borrow external influences, including tourism, which suit them while maintaining its identity. Meanwhile, Nordholt (2007) provides Balinese's strategy to take tourism as the important livelihood system while locating tradition as the inner culture and tourism as the outer. Similarly, indigenous tourism is offered as an alternative avenue to re-claim their cultural-religious identity and land tenure (Carr, 2016). Meanwhile, by taking Madidi National Park in Bolivia, Ruhanen & Whitford (2019) poses that preserving local culture and the conservation should be put as two of the central objectives of the ecotourism industry.

Neglected in terms of local beliefs practices and customary lands right, Kasepuhan Ciptagelar has taken tourism as a new ground for expressing a distinctive cultural identity. In this case, cultural practices and indigenous beliefs are something which is inseparable and represented through the traditional paddy planting activities (Kusdiwanggo, 2016). Thus, in the last few years these authentic customary practices have been considered as important cultural capital and also a valuable resource to engage tourism. Franz von Benda-Beckmann and Beckmann & Benda-Beckmann (2011), emphasize adat law as "the totality of the rules of conduct for natives and foreign oriental that has, on the one hand, sanctions and on the other, are not codified". Kasepuhan's social rules are internally applied to community members and enacted for daily life; dressing style, settlement, forest and agricultural land management, including how to give respect to the leader and so forth. As a communal society, forest areas, agricultural land and paddy field are considered as communal resources (Abdullah, 2012). Rice is seen as a sacred being, often viewed as the source of life, planted with full of respect and forbidden to sell. In lembur jero, rice is also should be cooked by using tungku, a traditional stove and firewood. Similar to the national park's forest zoning, traditionally forest area is divided into three categories: (a) leuweung tutupan which is forbidden to be exploited, (b) leuweung titipan, which can be used depending on the permit from abah and (c) leuweung bukaan; which can be used for human activities without any extension.

Different from the state law, these traditional law does not have strong direct punishment; those who break the law will not be given any direct punishment (Higgins-Desbiolles et al., 2022). Punishment is believed will be established through; getting sick, having a long period of nightmares, crop failure and the worst one; sudden death. The only way to avoid punishment from the ancestor is by going to the leader, admitting the mistake and asking for an apology. In Kasepuhan, abah is the central figure which represents the whole society, or in another word, the cultural leader is the adat law itself. This social rule is transformed from generation to generation through fairy tales, local myths and rituals. Cultural practices also cannot be separated from other sociocultural activities, including cultural performances which are oday considered as the tourist attractions (Buzinde et al., 2020; Fang, 2020). Shortly, various rituals and cultural performances are the symbols of Sundanese identity and the adat establishment itself. Vincanne Adams's study (1996) on Sherpa's identity formation in Himalaya can be used to view the construction of Kasepuhan's identity based on the inside root and the demand to symbolically impress outsiders. Moreover, this struggle for authenticity is canalized by negotiation between self-identification and the possibilities offered by the capitalist market. Ciptagelar today is being seen and acts as the symbol of the authenticity of Sundanese culture for the young generation.

In the last few decades, tourism is viewed as the engine of economic growth and a tool of development in the world's less-developed countries (Curtin & Bird, 2022; Dolezal & Trupp, 2015; Honey, 1999). The combination of various natural and cultural resources has positioned Ciptagelar to be a perfect place for escaping from the city, to be a hidden "Shangri-la". Activities such as bird watching, jungle trekking, off-road, camping, cycling or taking photography are usually done in forest areas, rivers, and paddy fields surrounding the village. Meanwhile, cultural resources are drawn from indigenous beliefs through traditional ceremonies, rituals, traditional architecture, myths and local rules. There is no retribution ticket, but usually, the visitor will leave the amount of money for food and accommodation. Tourism activity is not merely a profit-oriented business; therefore, it cannot be measured from the professional tourism development rooted from profit-making.

Figure.1. Foreign tourist during Seren Taun harvest festival.

David Henley and Jamie S. Davidson (2008) identify there are four roots of adat revivalism in Indonesia; first, international influences, second; democratization and decentralization post New Order's era, third; the oppression during New Order administration and fourth; the positive historical role of adat since the beginning of Indonesian nationalism. The oppression in term of religious life and national park policy has demanded Kasepuhan to find out a way to survive, including their traditional agriculture on their customary land. International influences also play its role in establishing Kasepuhan's cultural movement. In 2000s few members of Kasepuhan actively engaged with indigenous people's federation in Indonesia; Aliansi Masyarakat Adat Nusantara (AMAN) to build a network in advocating religious issues and to gain legal recognition for customary land. Coincidentally, after the establishment of micro-hydroelectric power in the 2000's facilitated by one national NGO, the flow of people coming was significantly increasing. This is the "turning point" and they are smartly using the opportunity to establish a new arena for expressing cultural identity.

The new era of Indonesia's democratization in 1998 arrived to be an opportunity, along with the demand to fulfil the global market of tourism. Using this ground, Kasepuhan started to leave the confrontational and returned to the accommodative strategy by focusing on cultural tourism. They considered the confrontational strategy as ineffective, thus started decreasing their engagement with AMAN's network. The strategy has brought the community to openly begin conducting various rituals and ceremonies that are accessible to outsiders. Interestingly, the people refuse to categorize it as "tourism" nor Ciptagelar as a tourism destination. "We are not promoting tourism; instead, we are maintaining our culture and tradition. But if people come as a tourist, they are welcome", one elite member emphasizes during the Seren Taun harvest festival.

In the last few years, the biggest harvest festival seren taun has become a popular tourist attraction attended by visitors both domestic and from foreign countries. The promotion can be easily found on the internet, social media, and government office including at the national park website. Interestingly, within the uncertain relationship with the national park authority, people built two traditional guest houses that can be used by national park officers when they visit Ciptagelar. This is the ultimate evidence of the accommodative strategy in using tourism as its medium. In a similar vein, Kasepuhan Ciptagelar also serves as a perfect arena to fulfil a "root syndrome" for the young Sundanese living in the cities. Recently, I met a few young Sundanese from Jakarta who came to form new ties to “the original Sundanese” represented by the Kasepuhan. They wore traditional Sundanese clothes and carefully listened to the story from local people about the history of the legendary Sundanese king in the past; Siliwangi.

The trajectory of tourism in Ciptagelar has been started in 2000-s during the era of the former leader, Abah Anom. He was recognized as a spiritual advisor and had a wide range of networks, thus a lot of guests visited the area to meet abah. After completing “ngalalakon” from Ciptarasa area to the current Ciptagelar in 2001, the harvest festival seren taun transformed to be open for the public. It directly triggers the increase of people coming to Ciptagelar, not only for spiritual purposes but also to enjoy its natural and cultural attractiveness. The second period is marked by the effort of the new leader in 2007, Abah Ugi to continue taking tourism as a ground to maintain a better network with other parties. Moreover, the new leader who is familiar with modern electronic devices even strategically takes tourism as the arena to expose Kasepuhan identity to wider audiences both through exposing the harvest festival and the daily activities. Since 2010s, weekly visits can reach 50 people and the harvest festival in 2019 was attended by more than 1000 visitors who stayed in Ciptagelar. Local and national politicians also start to consider Kasepuhan Ciptagelar for its political capital, and then regularly visit several cultural events to connect themselves with the crowds. In a similar vein, through the intensive engagement with tourism, people in Ciptagelar had confidently started to declare that they have a different way of practicing Islam. Ki Absor argues that people also need a normal life and tourism provides the best way without devastating forests and local beliefs inherited from their ancestors. It explains why tourism is seen as a promising choice while keeps refusing to declare Ciptagelar as “a tourism area”, but an adat area.

On the one hand, tourism has triggered the community to produce strategies to adapt to external forces (Holder et al., 2022), as it is emphasized by Robertson (1995) with the term “glocalization”, but on the other, it has also brought various changes. Longchar (2014) argues that commercially oriented tourism is one of the most popular instruments of globalization and potentially does not give enough respect to life, culture and the environment. Meanwhile, Cohen (2013) emphasizes that tourism as a popular vehicle for globalization has brought the elimination of barriers. It also inevitably brings various changes to Ciptagelar. A local person, A (pseudo-name) secretly criticized the leader for being too busy with his laptop, rather than building a close interaction with his people. Another critical young man, B openly criticized visitors who were physically “too close” with Abah Ugi, even hugging him. For the local people abah, is a respected figure who should be untouchable, but visitors break this rule. He also criticizes travel agents who often “sell” cultural tours to Ciptagelar with high prices, but only give a small portion to the local people. Lastly, he strongly criticized his people who now appear to be “money-oriented” by counting every activity with the visitors with the amount of money.

Nowadays, Kasepuhan uses in-out strategy to maintain its distinctive identity. Out-strategy is conducted by promoting cultural tourism to as much as wider audiences, meanwhile, in-strategy to internally strengthen Kasepuhan identity by conducting various rituals to unite its members. Tourism as a ground of cultural expression reached its ultimate goal when the provincial government officially declares the area as one of the the major tourism areas in West Java. Moreover, since 2017 the representation of national park authority attended the harvest festival and stated Ciptagelar as a “special” cultural tourism area in Halimun Salak National Park Area. It brings a strong message: the people are legally settling there. In terms of religious practices, having been considered as a valuable tourist attraction, various rituals rooted in local beliefs can be freely practiced, and moreover facilitates the hegemony of the beliefs over the Islamic influences in the area. It means that tourism has provided a sort of political opportunity for the indigenous community to express their cultural distinctive and also better recognition of their customary land which is central to maintaining its culture.

E. CONCLUSION

Borrowing James (2010), the fundament of this study is the effort of people from the ‘peripheries’ represented by the effort of Kasepuhan Ciptagelar to preserve their cultural identity. Kasepuhan is not merely passive in dealing with external forces, but actively producing daily strategies to survive, including through taking tourism as its ground. In the last few decades, Kasepuhan has been denied in terms of freedom to practice local beliefs and neglected from the ancestral land by the enactment of the national park. Accepting Islam as the formal religion but limiting its values in daily life and favor tatali paranti karuhun is the accommodative strategy to deal with the Islamic majority groups Interestingly, nowadays Kasepuhan arrives at the point to engage with tourism itself to obtain the bigger recognition for their cultural practices. Consciously taking tourism as its avenue, Kasepuhan has resisted colonial power, the modern state and the dominant role of the majority religious group throughout their history. In a similar vein, admitted for having valuable natural and cultural resources that are needed to support tourism development in the area, various rituals rooted in tatali paranti karuhun can be freely performed. Moreover, in terms of land issues, people in Kasepuhan is no longer considered illegal settlers within the national park boundary. Thus, it represents the idea that Kasepuhan is not powerless; conversely, they have produced hidden productivity in several ways, including with its consequences in several fields.

Bibliography

- Abdullah, M. (2012). Green Vision Dalam Tradisi Kearifan Syariah Islam. Ibda': Jurnal Kebudayaan Isla, 10(1), 30–46.
- Adams, V. (1996). Tigers of the Snow and Other Virtual Sherpas: An ethnography of Himalayan Encounters. Princeton University Press.
- Aly, H. (2015). Syariat Dalam Balutan Ibadat Dan Adat. IBDA': Jurnal Kajian Islam Dan Budaya, 13(2), 97–111. <https://doi.org/10.24090/ibda.v13i2.664>
- Beckmann, F. V. B., & Benda-Beckmann, K. Von. (2011). Myths and Stereotypes about Adat Law: a Reassessment of Van Vollenhoven in The Light of Current Struggle Over Adat Law in Indonesia. 167-2/3; pp 167-195. Bijgraden Tot de Taal-, Land-En Volkunde (BKI), 167(2/3), 167–195.
- BPS. (2020). Provinsi Jawa Barat Dalam Angka. <https://jabar.bps.go.id/publication/2020/04/27/cfab9a400cf304f800182a5f/provinsi-jawa-barat-dalam-angka-2020.html>
- Buzinde, C. N., Manuel-Navarrete, D., & Swanson, T. (2020). Co-producing Sustainable Solutions in Indigenous Communities through Scientific Tourism. Journal of Sustainable Tourism, 28(9), 1255–1271. <https://doi.org/10.1080/09669582.2020.1732993>
- Carr, A. et al. (2016). Indigenous People and Tourism: the Challenge and Opportunities for Sustainable Tourism. Journal of Sustainable Tourism, 24(8–9), 1067–1079.
- Chakim, S. (2022). A Review of Rituals and Local Wisdom of Indigenous Peoples in Indonesia. IBDA': Jurnal Kajian Islam Dan Budaya, 20(2), 181–199. <https://doi.org/10.24090/ibda.v20i2.6439>
- Cohen, E. (2013). Globalization, Global Crises and Tourism. Tourism Recreation Research, 37(2), 103–111.
- Curtin, N., & Bird, S. (2022). “We are reconciliators”: When Indigenous tourism begins with agency. Journal of Sustainable Tourism, 30(2–3), 461–481. <https://doi.org/10.1080/09669582.2021.1903908>
- Dolezal, C., & Trupp, A. (2015). Tourism and development in Southeast Asia. Austrian Journal of South-East Asian Studies, 8(2), 117–124. <https://doi.org/10.14764/10.ASEAS-2015.2-1>
- Dong, T. B. (2020). Cultural Tourism: An Ethnographic Study of Home Stay in Briddim Village, Nepal. The Gaze: Journal of Tourism and Hospitality, 11(1), 10–36. <https://doi.org/10.3126/gaze.v11i1.26612>
- Dove, M. (1985). Peranan Kebudayaan Tradisional dalam Pembangunan. Yayasan Obor Indonesia.
- Fang, W.-T. (2020). Cultural Tourism BT - Tourism in Emerging Economies: The Way We Green, Sustainable, and Healthy (W.-T. Fang (ed.); pp. 75–101). Springer Singapore. https://doi.org/10.1007/978-981-15-2463-9\_4

- Friedman, J. (2000). Cultural Identity and Global Process. Sage Publications.
- Gamma, G., Sirait, M., N, R., Soenarto, F., & Nurzaman, B. (2005). History of Land-Use Policies and Designation of Mount Halimun-Salak National Park. Jurnal Manajemen Hutan Tropika, XI(1), 1–13.
- Gedicks, A. (2001). Resource Rebel. South End Press.
- Gray, A. (1997). Indigenous Rights and Development: Self-Determination in an Amazonian Community. England.
- Heffner, R. W. (1999). Geger Tengger: Perubahan Sosial dan Perkelahian Politik. LKiS.
- Higgins-Desbiolles, F., Blanchard, L.-A., & Urbain, Y. (2022). Peace Through Tourism: Critical Reflections on the Intersections Between Peace, Justice, Sustainable Development and Tourism. Journal of Sustainable Tourism, 30(2–3), 335–351. <https://doi.org/10.1080/09669582.2021.1952420>
- Holder, A., Walters, G., Ruhanen, L., & Mkono, M. (2022). Exploring tourist's socio-cultural aversions, self-congruity bias, attitudes and willingness to participate in indigenous tourism. Journal of Vacation Marketing, 13567667221124344. <https://doi.org/10.1177/13567667221124343>
- Honey, M. (1999). Ecotourism and Sustainable Development: Who Owns Paradise? Island Press.
- Irianto, S. (2016). Masyarakat Adat Keindonesiaan. Kompas Daily Magazine. <https://law.ui.ac.id/sulistyowati-irianto-kompas-cetak-masyarakat-adat-keindonesiaan>
- James, S. (2010). The Art of Not Being Governed: An Anarchist History of Upland Southeast Asia. NUS Press.
- Kathleen M. Adams. (1997). Ethnic Tourism and Renegotiation of Tradition in Tana Toraja. Ethnology, 36(4), 309–320.
- Koentjaraningrat. (1993). Masalah Kesukubangsaan dan Integrasi Nasional. Gramedia Pustaka Utama.
- Kusdiwanggo, S. (2016). Konsep Pola Permukiman Spasial di Kasepuhan Ciptagelar. Jurnal Permukiman, 11(1), 29–42.
- Li, T. M. (2000). Articulating indigenous identity in indonesia: Resource politics and the tribal slot. Comparative Studies in Society and History, 42(1), 149–179. <https://doi.org/10.1017/S0010417500002632>
- Longchar, W. (2014). Tourism Industry-An Instrument of Neo-Liberal Economic Project: A Ministerial Challenge. The Asia Journal of Theology, 28(1), 59–69.
- Moniaga, S. (2007). From Bumiputera to Masyarakat Adat: The Revival of Tradition in Indonesian Politics. In D. Davidson, J. and Henley (Ed.), The Deployment of Adat from Colonialism to Indigenism (pp. 275–294). Routledge.
- Mutaqin, Z. Z. (2014). Penghayat, orthodoxy and the legal politics of the state. Indonesia and the Malay World, 42(122), 1–23. <https://doi.org/10.1080/13639811.2014.870771>
- Muttaqin, A., & Noor, N. M. (2022). Local Islam and Javanese Culture Penetration: Muslim Alif Rebo Wage (Aboge) Negotiations in Identity Formation. Ibda': Jurnal Kajian Islam Dan Budaya, 20(1), 110–130.
- Nordholt, H. S. (2007). Bali, Benteng Terbuka 1995-2005: Otonomi Daerah, Demokrasi Electoral dan Identitas Defensive. Pustaka Larasan.
- Peluso, N. L., & Vandergeest, P. (2001). Genealogies of the Political Forest and Customary Rights in Indonesia, Malaysia, and Thailand. The Journal of Asian Studies, 60(3), 761–812.
- Picard, M. (1996). "Cultural Tourism" in Bali: Cultural Performances as Tourist Attraction." Indonesia, 49, pp: 37-74. Archipelago, the University of California.

- Putri, S., Sukirno, & Sudaryatmi, S. (2017). Implikasi Putas Mk Terhadap Eksistensi Hutan Adat Masyarakat Yang Tumpang Tindih Dengan Hutan Konservasi Taman Nasional Gunung Halimun Salak. Diponegoro Law Journal, 6(35), 1–22.
- Rich, B. (1999). Mortgaging the Earth: The World Bank, Environmental Impoverishment and the Crisis of Development. INFID.
- Ricklefs, M. . (2017). Sejarah Indonesia Modern. Gadjah Mada University Press.
- Robertson, R. (1995). Glocalization: Time-space and homogeneity-heterogeneity. In Global Modernities (pp. 25–45). Sage Publications, Ltd.
- Royer, S. De, Visser, L. E., Galudra, G., Pradhan, U., & Van Noordwijk, M. (2015). Self-Identification of Indigenous People in Post-Independence Indonesia: A Historical Analysis in the Context of REDD+. International Forestry Review, 17(3), 282–297. <https://doi.org/10.1505/146554815815982648>
- Ruhanen, L., & Whitford, M. (2019). Cultural heritage and Indigenous tourism. Journal of Heritage Tourism, 14(3), 179–191. <https://doi.org/10.1080/1743873X.2019.1581788>
- Shiva, V. (1998). Staying Alive: Women, Ecology and Survival in India. Zed Book Ltd.
- Spradley, J. (1975). Anthropology: The Cultural Perspective. John Wiley and Sons Inc.
- Subur. (2017). Religi Grebeg Sura di Banyumas. Ibda': Jurnal Kajian Islam Dan Budaya, 15(1), 59–75.
- Topatimasang, R. (2004). Orang Orang Kalah. Insist Press.
- Trupp, A. (2011). Exhibiting the “Other” Then and Now: “Human Zoos” in Southern China and Thailand. ASEAS-Austrian Journal of South-East Asian Studies, 4(1), 139–149. www.ssoar.info
- Tsing, A.-L. (2005). Friction: An Ethnography of Global Connection. Princeton University Press.
- Webb, R. . (1986). The Sickle and the Cross: Christians and Communists in Bali, Flores, Sumba and Timor. Journal of Southeast Asian Studies, 17(1), 94–112.
- Widiyanto, N. (2019). Indigenous Religion Revivalism and Tourism Development in Indonesia and Malaysia (A Study on Kasepuhan Ciptagelar, West Java and Bundu Tuhan Dusun's Community in Sabah). Universitas Gadjah Mada.
- Widiyanto, N., & Agra, E. (2019). Tourism Development and the New Path of Migration in Sabah, Malaysia. Borneo Research Journal, 13(1), 81–97. <https://doi.org/10.22452/brj.vol13no1.5>
- Widyaningsih, R. (2017). Dimensi Sosial dan Religi Kearifan Lokal Banyumas. LPPM Unsoed.

Bukti Korespondensi 3 : Accept Revision (2 Maret 2023)

Bukti Korespondensi 4: Proofreading decision; revision (1 April 2023, 07.30 WIB)

Bukti Korespondensi 5: Submission of revision 2 (1 April 2023, 14.44)

Contesting Identity through the Market: Tourism and Indigenous Movement in Kasepuhan Ciptagelar, West Java

Abstract

This study identifies the interplay between the engagement of Kasepuhan Ciptagelar, an indigenous community inhabiting the state forest in West Java, and tourism development in the area. Practising local spirituality rooted in an indigenous belief, tatali paranti karuhun, while administratively accepting Islam, the people have been struggling to deal with the nearby majority Sundanese who practices Islam

Commented [SG1]: Normal for one word to be in italics, but the other not? Or italics for neither?

Commented [SG2]: 'the' means there's just one state forest

Commented [NW3R2]: Yes, it specifically to the forest of Halimun Salak National Park and the establishment of the national park covering their living space. The study considers whether a minority group living in an area endowed with both natural and cultural tourism resources consciously chooses tourism as a selected ground to deal with policies which neglect them in terms of religious practices and land policy. Employing the ethnographic method, the study reveals that contesting identity in tourism also means the readiness to accommodate various outside elements. However, the strategy has led the Halimun Salak National Park authority to declare the area as a “special status area” for cultural tourism inside the state park since 2017. The study findings show that after engaging with tourism, various rituals and art performances rooted in the old Sundanese spirituality, which is not officially recognized by the state, can be freely performed for the sake of tourists. In this case, the community is not passive in dealing with external forces but has also enabled its own silent productivity, including its varying consequences.

Keywords: identity, cultural, Ciptagelar, indigenous, Islam, tourism

Commented [SG4]: ‘can engage with tourism’?

Commented [NW5R4]: It refers to the engagement of the people with tourism activities

Commented [SG6]: See comment on next page about whether the Kasepuhan Ciptagelar are Sundanese themselves or not

Commented [SG7]: by the Kasepuhan Ciptagelar?

Commented [SG8]: ‘silent productivity’ not clear to me

A. INTRODUCTION

Rich (1999) has described the last few decades as “the decades of failure”, marked by political change in the management of natural resources, resulting in the dispossession of indigenous communities from their lands. Such actions have triggered social movements to respond its various ecological and socio-cultural impacts. The basic demand of these movements is to gain more respect for collective rights to land and cultural identity (Gray, 1997; Moniaga, 2007). Moreover, Clay, cited in Gedicks (2001) and Shiva (1998) has noted that the 20th century, known as the age of development and witnessed more extinction of indigenous people than any other in history. Indigenous communities have been excluded from the public discussion, while outside forces have exploited their homelands. In Borneo, this was sadly highlighted by the voice of one of the indigenous people inhabiting Meratus Mountains, said “better you had brought me a bomb, so I could blow this place up” (Tsing, 2005). Moreover, the exclusion of the indigenous community is identified into four types of discrimination: limited access to their own environment; lack of legal justification to practice their local beliefs; loss of citizens’ rights; and loss of living space of living as their land has been claimed as state territory (Irianto, 2016).

One of the indigenous communities in Indonesia that has been facing a series of discriminatory actions is the Kasepuhan Ciptagelar. They are a traditional agrarian Sundanese group consisting of around 30,000 people inhabiting the area surrounding Mount Halimun-Salak National Park in Sukabumi, West Java, Indonesia, including 150 households inhabiting Ciptagelar, an enclave within state park boundaries. Kasepuhan is considered to be a part of Sunda Wiwitan, a common term for categorizing old Sundanese tradition. The term wiwitan is rooted in awit or wiwit, which can be interpreted as “the beginning”, meaning different from

Commented [SG9]: ‘decades’?

The quote is from 1999, so can't refer to the last few decades, which would be up to now.

Commented [SG10]: see above

Commented [SG11]: In the abstract you say they are ‘struggling to deal with the nearby majority Sundanese’, but here that they are Sundanese themselves, s I'm a bit confused as to their identity.

Commented [NW12R11]: Thank you for your comment, yes, they are struggling no in the matter of ethnic identity because they are both are Sundanese, but they practice different religious practices. The people in Ciptagelar practice a local beliefs namely tatali paranti karuhun while administratively hold Islam as their religion contemporary Sundanese practice, which is mostly Islam. The people living in Ciptagelar practice a local beliefs namely tatali paranti karuhun, or the religion of the ancestors while having Islam as their legal religion.

According to official figures, the population of Sunda Wiwitan followers is around 100,000 in West Java. However, this is small when it is compared to the total population of West Java, which is around 48,600,000, of whom 45.1 million (97%) are Muslim (BPS, 2020). Therefore, from the religious perspective, people living in Ciptagelar are often considered as “deviant” as they practice indigenous spirituality while accepting to be administratively Muslim. In terms of land issues, the government policy of establishing the 40,000 hectares of the Mount Halimun area as a national park in 1992 directly led to the people being categorized as illegal inhabitants on their own land. Moreover, the extension of the national park area to more than 113,000 hectares in 2003 meant that all the settlement area, community forest and agricultural land in Kasepuhan Ciptagelar was within the state forest boundary (Widiyanto, 2019).

This study presents an analysis of asepuhan resistance to external forces by focusing on tourism as the selected arena. Interestingly, the resistance is conducted without any violence, which represents the “harmonious ideology” of the group. In the past, indigenous communities in Indonesia were often referred to as “isolated communities” and tended to be perceived as “uncivilized” (Chakim, 2022; Koentjaraningrat, 1993). In fact, such groups have made a long-standing contact with the outside world, including market and colonial powers (Topatimasang, 2004). Before the arrival of colonial powers, customary practices, or adat, were considered to be social entities united by particular customs, rituals and practices of social life (Royer, Visser, Galudra, Pradhan & Noordwijk, 2015). Subsequently, through imposing landscapes on maps, the colonial government imposed various stereotypes on indigenous groups in order to gain control over them (Peluso & Vandergeest, 2001). After independence, economic growth became the main agenda and indigenous groups were designated as a challenge to capitalistic principles and an obstacle to such growth (Dove, 1985; Li, 2000).

This ethnographic study views that in terms of religious dynamics and the struggle to regain customary land, minority groups are not powerless and passive. The Dusun community in Sabah Malaysia has accepted Christianity and Islam as formal religions; however, they maintain their local spirituality momolianism as the central identity of the group (Widiyanto &

Commented [SG13]: The ‘practices’ can’t be ‘social entities’ themselves. They could be ‘performed by’ the entities.

Commented [SG14]: In APA 6 referencing, the first time you cite 3-5 authors you need to put all their surnames. If you cite them again, you then put ‘et al.’

Agra, 2019). Mutaqin (2014) identifies another Sunda Wiwitan group in Kuningan, which has employed two different tactics in dealing with state policies: “front stage” and “backstage”.<sup>5</sup> However, according to Adams (1997) with regard to Torajan’s engagement with tourism in South Sulawesi, identity can be effectively negotiated through tourism, but it can also have various negative impacts on local identity.

In the nearby province, Central Java, the Aboge (Alif Rebo Wage) community in Banyumas consciously presents its locality by preserving panginyongan as a counter-discourse to the Javanese mainstream culture (Muttaqin & Noor, 2022; Widyaningsih, 2017). In a similar vein, this study focuses on the further step in the “front stage” strategy selected by Kasepuhan Ciptagelar to open up opportunities for cultural revivalism and fulfil the demand to establish a tourism agenda. Moreover, revivalism is taking place based on evidence that in the last few years Kasepuhan has been successfully increasing its ability to express their cultural identity through tourism. Therefore, different to other studies that tend to view tourism in terms of its negative influences on local culture, the importance of this research centers on how tourism provides an opportunity for indigenous groups to strengthen their cultural identity and access to customary land.

B. METHOD AND MATERIAL

The aim of this study is to analyze the interplay between the efforts of Kasepuhan Ciptagelar to strengthen their cultural identity rooted in a local belief, tatali paranti karuhun and tourism development in the area. The ethnographic research was conducted in Kasepuhan Ciptagelar, Cisolok District, Sukabumi Regency, West Java and the area of Halimun-Salak National Park since 2017 and regularly updated in recent years. Kasepuhan was chosen for its strong engagement with tourism, not only to achieve regular economic benefits from the industry, but in relation to its cultural aims. The ethnographic method is one of the best ways to understand phenomena from the people’s point of view through a fieldwork process involving participant observation and in-depth interviews, completed by secondary data analysis (Spradley, 1975). Therefore, an intimate association with informants is necessary to interpret significant symbols, emotions, understanding and statements of the underlying regularities of human experience. The <sup>5</sup> Front stage refers to the pretense of converting to the formal religion, while back stage means people practice their local beliefs.

Commented [SG15]: Who or what is this?

Commented [NW16R15]: The people living in Tanah Toraja, Sulawesi

Commented [SG17]: What’s this?

Commented [NW18R17]: Panginyongan is a Javanese sub culture referring to the Banyumas people living in the western part of Central Java Commented [SG19]: Have you said what this is?

Commented [NW20R19]: Yes, a local belief rooted in old Sundanese culture. It has been explained on the background informants were thus selected based on their involvement in cultural practices related to the history of their group and also their connection with tourism activities. They included Abah Ugi, the cultural leader; the baris kolot, or the group elder; members of the community; people from the nearby villages; local government; national park staff; and visitors to Ciptagelar. In addition, secondary data were gathered from various sources, including local manuscripts, previous research, local governments, the national park authority, and libraries, including that of Leiden University.

Commented [SG21]: Check use of italics

Observation was made of various rituals and art performances; interaction took place between local people and outsiders, and also among local people themselves; and in-depth interviews were conducted to obtain people's perspectives of their cultural life. The findings from a series of observations and in-depth interviews were cross-checked to identify common understanding of the collective memory of past cultural practices and how these have changed over time. The final stage was cross-analysis of the similarities and differences between local people and the outsider's perspective on the cultural practices to establish patterns in the engagement between Kasepuhan and tourism by identifying several key themes from the primary data in particular. The process was completed by compilation of the secondary data, which provided the history of Kasepuhan and the external forces influencing their cultural and religious practices. As the informants' memories might not be uniform, the findings were narrowed down to generate a new thematic structure until the differences could be identified. Finally, all the data were interpreted to establish the framework and motives related to the transformation of cultural practices and its connection to tourism development in Kasepuhan Ciptagelar.

C. RESULTS AND DISCUSSION

1. Kasepuhan under the shadow of giants

a. Tatali paranti karuhun: a constant target to convert

In the early period of Indonesian independence, the rivalry between Islamic and secular groups was represented by the political race between Masyumi and PNI, followed by the emergence of the Indonesian Communist Party-PKI (Ricklefs, 2017). This ideological rivalry was continued until the final period of Sukarno's administration, which saw the establishment of a government board, Pengawas Aliran Kepercayaan Masyarakat (PAKEM), to protect the majority religions from the "negative" influence of non-religious beliefs, and also to control these. The ultimate indication of the state's control over local beliefs was the enactment of Commented [SG22]: meaning Leiden University library – OK?

Commented [NW23R22]: Yes, from the Leiden's Library

Commented [SG24]: addition OK?

Commented [NW25R24]: Ok

Commented [SG26]: 'similarities and differences' in what?

Commented [NW27R26]:

Law No. 1/PNPS/1969, which stated that only six religions would be legally recognized: Islam, Christian-Protestant, Catholic, Buddhism, Hinduism and Konghuchu (Ricklefs, 2017). This was the basic support for various types of discrimination against indigenous beliefs, including against the people in Kasepuhan Ciptagelar. Although a Constitutional Court decision in 2016 gave local beliefs equal rights with the official religions, they are in fact still viewed differently and have to struggle to gain more recognition.

During the leadership of the former cultural leader, Abah Anom, or before 2007, there were two main issues affecting the daily life of the Kasepuhan Ciptagelar: the extension of the national park boundaries and the relationship with the nearby Islamic community. Administratively, since the 1960s people in Kasepuhan have accepted Islam; however, they practice it in their own way. This means that Islam has been accepted as a formal religion, while tatali paranti karuhun is taken as the main spiritual guidance in daily life<sup>6</sup>. This worldview is mainly based on the idea that there is an upper world where the gods exist, and a profane one where human being live, which should always be connected in everyday life. The only figure who is able to connect these two different worlds is abah as the cultural leader (Widiyanto, 2019). In daily life, this connection is represented by the obligation to conduct a ritual led by abah to obtain permission from the ancestors before starting, for example, any agricultural activity, building houses, performing marriages, or going to other places. According to Ki Absor, one of the elder group members, for the people religion is located in the heart, therefore it is not necessary to regularly pray five times a day, or to fast during Ramadhan. The most important aspect of the religion is considered to be “safety”, in Islam salamat (Subur, 2017). Safety means being safe in daily life by having a good paddy harvest, and the only way to achieve this is by following customary rules and following abah as the cultural leader.

However, the people living in Ciptagelar cannot be associated with a single entity in terms of religious life; there are at least four different types of groups related to the dynamics between Islam and tatali paranti karuhun:

<sup>6</sup> Besides tatali paranti karuhun, people use agama karuhun or sela, which are rooted in Islam, to describe their religious practices, while Sunda Wiwitan is commonly used by outsiders.

Commented [SG28]: Have you said what this means?

Commented [NW29R28]: I have added in the background

Commented [SG30]: 'the abah'?

Commented [SG31]: 'this connection'?

Commented [SG32]: the abah?

Commented [NW33R32]: All people in Kasepuhan Ciptagelar use “abah” to mention their cultural leader, it is a kind of respected name

Commented [SG34]: i.e., types of entity. OK? Listed though are types of people rather than entities

- i. The members who strongly hold tatali paranti karuhun as the main guideline or the jiwa jero (inner soul), and merely see Islam as an administrative matter. The numbers of this group are limited to those living in the lembur jero (inner village) of Ciptagelar.
- j. The members who practice both tatali paranti karuhun and Islam, interchangeably practicing adat and Islam. These include those who live in the villages surrounding the lembur jero and other neighbouring regencies, such as Lebak and Bogor. The numbers of this group are the majority; however, it is difficult to precisely estimate their number.
- k. Those who no longer hold tatali paranti karuhun or are totally converted to Islam, but still admit themselves as part of Kasepuhan and admit the abah as a cultural leader. These form a minority, but again actual numbers are unclear.
- l. Those having roots in Kasepuhan culture but who have totally converted to Islam and no longer have any spiritual bond to Kasepuhan, including no longer admitting the abah as a cultural leader.

Commented [SG35]: 'of Ciptagelar'?

Commented [SG36]: 'totally purified to' not clear to me

The position of abah is central in uniting these different types of Kasepuhan members. He acts as the umbrella for all of them, therefore their interaction do not take place in conflicting ways. This means that all are accepted and respected, as long as the central cultural core, admitting the existence of the cultural leader, is still tightly held. Therefore, the dynamics and debates between the different groups are usually hidden and never come out into the public area.

Commented [SG37]: 'the role'?

In the last few decades, adat spirituality has continued to dominate the daily life of people in Ciptagelar; not many local people perform shalat, including in the Friday prayers. Interestingly, people also actively use Islamic words, such as alhamdulillah or bismillah. Many members believe that religious issues are not interesting to discuss because this could disturb the harmony of the group. During my fieldwork in Ciptagelar, I regularly meet Gafur, an ojek driver who usually takes me from the nearest city, Cisolok. He keeps questioning my motive to visit Ciptagelar, which seems strange to him. Gafur believes that visiting Ciptagelar, which takes around 2.5 hours by motorcycle from the coastal area, is not useful. Moreover, it is hard to cross the jungle in the hilly areas, and he emphasizes that the people there are still primitive and practice black magic. No-one performs shalat in Ciptagelar, and

Commented [SG38]: 'perform' OK?

Commented [SG39]: Have you said what this is?

he advises that adat rules in Ciptagelar should never be broken. However, Gapur also recognizes that Seren Taun, a harvest festival conducted by the group, is a popular annual event attracting many visitors, both foreign and domestic. On my return once after visiting Kasepuhan, I bought a meal at a seafood stall in Pelabuhan Ratu, the capital of the regency. The seller, a woman wearing a veil, simply asked “Did you see any people practicing shalat there?”, directly after I had told her that I had just visited Ciptagelar. This represents a common image to the people in Ciptagelar, who practice a different spirituality within the predominantly Islamic society.

Commented [SG40]: Same as 'shalat'?

Commented [NW41R40]: Yes, it should be shalat

The acceptance of Islam as a formal religion in Ciptagelar is the fruit of the dynamic relationship with the majority Islamic society and the state. However, at a practical level, Islam is the second option, demonstrated by when the community conducted the ngembangkeun ritual, a pilgrimage to the grave of Abah Anom on a hill called Pangapungan. This took place on a Friday, when Muslims should go to the mosque for weekly prayers; however, all those who gathered at the ritual missed the Jumat prayers, including Ki Amil, who is an Islamic representative within the community. The pilgrimage led by Abah Ugi, who replaced his father in 2007 as cultural leader, is intended to ask permission from the ancestors to start welcoming the harvest period and preparing the biggest festival, Seren Taun. Ki Amil consciously emphasizes that the adat agenda should be the first priority over anything else.

The acceptance of Islam is the frontstage strategy to deal with larger external forces and also to maintain the existence of the religion of the ancestors (Aly, 2015). In the period 1950's, the Kasepuhan were often attacked by the Islamic rebellion group DI/TII because it was considered the enemy of Islamic values. However, administrative acceptance of Islam might be connected to the enactment of PNPS Law No.1/1965, which considers only five world religions to be recognized by the state, and which was followed by TAP MPR NO IV/1978, which indicated that indigenous beliefs were not recognized religions. The other reason is their feeling of being under pressure that their belief is not a religion as defined by the state. In a similar vein, it is also connected to the basic nature of the Kasepuhan leadership, which is usually open to changes from the outside (Widiyanto, 2019). The political situation after Indonesian Communist Party's (PKI) rebellion in 1965 which emphasized that people who did not have a religion could be deemed to be communist was Commented [SG42]: In 1957? Or in the 1950s?

Commented [NW43R42]: 1950s

Commented [SG44]: Check the changes are OK

Commented [SG45]: reason for what?

Commented [NW46R45]: For administratively accepting Islam

another important pressure (Webb, 1986).

In contemporary Kasepuhan, all members of the group have been obliged to be administratively Muslim. However, this does not mean that the pressure from outside Islamic groups has ended. The majority of such groups from surrounding areas tend to perceive that Islamic practices in Kasepuhan are combined with various elements of animism. Furthermore, it has made the people in Lembur Jero Ciptagelar permanent targets to be “purified”. The regular visits of tabligh groups from neighboring cities to purify them is strong evidence of this. The arrival of these groups started during the period of the previous leader, Abah Anom, before 2007. In a few cases, they did not first go to the cultural leader to obtain permission, but directly stayed in the mushola. These facts show that up to now, the local spirituality of tatali paranti karuhun in Ciptagelar exists under the shadow of the state and also of the majority groups.

b. Kasepuhan and Land Tenure Rights

The government’s decision to extend the Halimun Salak National Park area from 40,000 to 113,000 hectares in 2003 is the other main issue in Kasepuhan. The move was followed by a claim that people living in the park area were illegal inhabitants. However, the people in Kasepuhan do not resist this policy as long as it does not disturb their settlement, traditional forest area and agricultural lands, particularly paddy fields, as the core of their cultural patterns. The establishment of national parks is also considered to be part of the state’s consolidation during the New Order regime to accelerate its domination of natural resources (Moniaga, 2007). However, the new regime is only continuing policies enacted by the colonial powers, including in the Mount Halimun Salak areas. No new measures have been introduced, including the zoning system of the national park, which is closely related to the policy previously designed in the colonization period.

In the early 1700s the Dutch Vereenigde Oost-Indische Compagnie (VOC) started to introduce Agrarische Wet to change the Halimun forest area into a tea plantation zone and also rubber areas in the southern part. This continued during the period 1865 to 1942 through the designation of all areas above 1570 meters as protected areas for conservation purposes. This was the beginning of the land conflict between Kasepuhan and the state forest management under Dutch authority (Gamma et al., 2005). The policy is replicated by the Indonesian government by giving authority to the Forestry Department to control the areas.

Commented [SG47]: What’s this?

Commented [NW48R47]: Mushla is a small mosque built for the visitors

Commented [SG49]: i.e., now – OK?

Commented [SG50]: What does this mean?

Commented [NW51R50]: It is the Agrarian Law established by the Dutch

In a letter from the Agricultural Minister in 1978, the government declared forest areas in Mount Halimun, Mount Kendang, Mount Sanggabuana, Mount Nanggung and Ciampea covering almost 40,000 hectares to be under the control of the conservation board of BKSDA, with another 73,357 hectares managed by Perhutani for the production forest (Gamma et al., 2005). This policy was effective until 1992, when in minister letter No.282/1992 the 40,000 hectare area was changed to be became part of Halimun National Park. The area was extended to 113,357 hectares in 2003 and became Halimun-Salak National Park, meaning all the areas of Kasepuhan Ciptagelar's traditional settlements, rice barns and agricultural land fell within the state forest area.

Policies concerning the Halimun-Salak forest designed by both the Dutch and Indonesian governments share a common aspect: neglect of the existence of the Kasepuhan living in the area for hundred years. The history of Kasepuhan is related to a group of warriors from Pajajaran Kingdom, namely baris pangawinan, led by Demang Haur Tangtu. After Pajajaran was beaten by the Islamic powers in 1579, he was ordered by King Siliwangi to save a sacred flower, hanjuang bodas, and decided to move to the southern part of the Halimun area. This first movement was the beginning of the important and sacred ritual for the present Kasepuhan: ngalalakon or ngumbara. Until today, people believe that they are the descendants of Demang Haur Tangtu with his wife, Nini Tundarasa. The movement of or ngalalakon is the process of relocating the settlements, rice barns and agricultural lands, guided by the ancestors' spirit through the cultural leader. Moreover, it is also considered as the process to find a land, namely uga lebak cawene, a sacred and secret land offering prosperity according to the advice of the legendary Sundanese king, Siliwangi. According to Aki Karma, a member of the elder group, ngalalakon is the effort to find emptiness through beginning a new life in a new emptier area, which is locally term called ngalasuwung. Throughout the history of the group, this ritual has been conducted 19 times, up to the last movement in 2001 from Ciptarasa, outside the national park area, to the current Ciptagelar.

In fact, this traditional migration is considered the mechanism to adjust to ecological, political and demographic issues, including survival in the face of the dominant Islamic powers (Dong, 2020; Putri et al., 2017). At this point, the movement has become the main problem in terms of forest protection. When people in Kasepuhan perceive ngalalakon as a spiritual calling, the authorities contrarily emphasize their strategy of going deeper into and

Commented [SG52]: Who/what is this?

Commented [NW53R52]: Perhutani is the Indonesian State Company under the Forestry Department

Commented [SG54]: 'production forest' not clear to me

Commented [NW55R54]: There are two types of forest in Indonesia; conservation forest and the production fores. Production forest means the trees is planted for log

Commented [SG56]: Do you mean they have been living there for 100 years, or the neglect took place over 100 years?

Commented [NW57R56]: The the first one, they have been living there over that 100 years occupying forest areas. In these circumstances, indigenous identity, cultural distinctiveness, local beliefs and livelihood practices are often considered to be the problems (Li, 2000). In the last few years, ngalalakon has been seen as one of the central problems within the national park authority-Kasepuhan relationship, besides the Kasepuhan settlement within the national park area. Therefore, throughout the history of the colonial powers and the Indonesian government, Kasepuhan cultural practices have been dominated by the state and the majority Islamic groups.

Commented [SG58]: Please check the changes are OK

Commented [NW59R58]: That's ok

2. Tourism: a new ground for the expression of identity

The history of tourism development in Indonesia can be traced back to the period of the New Order, when tourism aimed to build national consciousness. Moreover, before the outbreak of Covid-19 tourism was expected to be the backbone of socioeconomic progress across the country. However, the interplay between indigenous movements and tourism development has rarely been studied. Heffner (1999) provides the example of a hill society in Tengger in East Java which has developed a hybrid identity between the Tenggerese and the predominantly Muslim society in the Bromo tourism area. During the 1970s, the Ainu in Japan used tourism, including crafts aimed at tourists and cultural tourism, as the central process in the reconstruction of Hawaiian and Ainu identity (Friedman, 2000). It is connected to, different from those suspecting that placing identity on the market would have a de-authenticating effect, but it also a booster to the revivalism of the traditional way of life. After struggling for years and then engaging in the tourist boom, contemporary Hawaiians do not need to advertise their local culture nowadays (Friedman, 2000).

Commented [SG60]: Sentence not clear. Please rewrite, carefully considering the meaning

Moreover, Trupp (2011:142) describes an unequal relationship between visitors and host community by taking an example of 'human zoos' as 'exceptional in combining exhibition, performance, education and domination'. Trupp also emphasizes that although the era of colonial human zoos had ended in the 1940s, similar power relations in the context of modern 'ethnic tourism' still exist (Trupp, 2011). In Indonesia, Picard (1996) emphasizes "cultural tourism" in describing the further engagement between culture and tourism. Picard notes that Balinese culture is renowned for its dynamic resilience based on its ability to borrow external influences, including tourism, which suit them while maintaining their identity. In addition, Nordholt (2007) discusses the Balinese strategy of developing tourism as an important livelihood system, while locating tradition as the inner culture, and tourism as the outer. Similarly, indigenous tourism is offered as an alternative avenue for reclaiming their cultural-religious identity and land tenure (Carr, 2016). In another example, by considering Madidi National Park in Bolivia, Ruhanen and Whitford (2019) argue that preserving local culture and conservation should be the two central objectives of the ecotourism industry.

Commented [SG61]: page number/s usually given for direct quotes

Neglected in terms of local belief practices and customary land rights, Kasepuhan Ciptagelar has adopted tourism as a new platform for expressing its distinctive cultural identity. In this case, cultural practices and indigenous beliefs are something which are inseparable and represented through traditional paddy planting activities (Kusdiwanggo, 2016). Therefore, in the last few years these authentic customary practices have been considered as important cultural capital and also a valuable resource for engaging tourism. According to the Van Vollenhoven's definition as cited in Beckmann and Benda-Beckmann (2011:171), adat law is "the totality of the rules of conduct for natives and foreign oriental that has, on the one hand, sanctions and on the other, are not codified". Kasepuhan social rules are internally applied to community members and enacted in daily life, such as regarding dressing style, settlements, forests, agricultural land management, and how to show respect to the leader. As a communal society, forest areas, agricultural land and paddy fields are considered communal resources (Abdullah, 2012). Rice is seen as a sacred being, often viewed as the source of life; it is planted with total respect and it is forbidden to sell it. In Lembur Jero, rice should be cooked using a tungku, a traditional stove and firewood. Similar to the national park forest zoning, the traditional forest area is divided into three categories: (a) leuweung tutupan, which is forbidden to be exploited; (b) leuweung titipan, which can be used depending on the permit from the abah; and (c) leuweung bukaan, which can be used for human activities without any extension.

Different from the state law, these traditional laws are not enforced with strong direct punishment; those who break the law will not be given any direct punishment (Higgins-Desbiolles et al., 2022). It is believed that punishment will be suffered by becoming ill, having a long period of nightmares, crop failure, or worst, sudden death. The only way to avoid punishment from the ancestors is by going to the leader, admitting the mistake and asking for an apology. In Kasepuhan, the cultural leader is the central figure who represents the whole society, or in other words, the cultural leader is the adat law itself. This social rule is transformed from generation to generation through fairy tales, local myths and rituals. Cultural practices cannot be separated from other sociocultural activities, including cultural performances, which today are

Commented [SG62]: Just put surnames. Not clear if this is one reference or two; if two, the other year is needed. Page number also needed for the direct quote

Commented [SG63]: Check the source. This doesn't look right.

Commented [SG64]: Not italics if this is a place considered as tourist attractions (Buzinde et al., 2020; Fang, 2020). In essence, the various rituals and cultural performances are symbols of Sundanese identity and the adat establishment itself. Adams's (1996) study of Sherpa identity formation in the Himalayas can be used to view the construction of Kasepuhan identity based on the inside roots and the demand to symbolically impress outsiders. Moreover, this struggle for authenticity is channelled by negotiation between self-identification and the possibilities offered by the capitalist market. Ciptagelar today is being seen by others and acts as the symbol of the authenticity of Sundanese culture for the young generation.

In the last few decades, tourism has been viewed as the engine of economic growth and a development tool in the world's less developed countries (Curtin & Bird, 2022; Dolezal & Trupp, 2015; Honey, 1999). The combination of various natural and cultural resources has positioned Ciptagelar as a perfect place for escaping from the city, making it a hidden "Shangri-la". Activities such as bird watching, jungle trekking, off-road, camping, cycling or photography are usually performed in the forest areas, rivers and paddy fields surrounding the village. At the same time, cultural resources are drawn from indigenous beliefs through traditional ceremonies and architecture, rituals, , myths and local rules. No charges are made, but usually visitors will leave an amount of money for food and accommodation. Tourism activity is not merely a profit-oriented business, so it cannot be measured against the professional tourism development rooted in profit-making.

Figure.1. Foreign tourist during the Seren Taun harvest festival.

Henley and Davidson (2008) identify four roots of adat revivalism in Indonesia: international influences; democratization and decentralization in the post-New Order era; the oppression during New Order administration; and the positive historical role of adat since the beginning of Indonesian nationalism. The oppression in terms of religious life and national park policy has forced the Kasepuhan to find ways to survive, including their traditional agriculture on their customary land. International influences also play a role in establishing Kasepuhan's cultural movement. In the 2000s, some members of Kasepuhan actively engaged with the indigenous people's federation in Indonesia, Aliansi Masyarakat Adat Nusantara (AMAN), to build a network for advocating religious issues and to gain legal recognition for customary land. Coincidentally, after the establishment of micro-hydroelectric power in the 2000s facilitated by a national NGO, the inflow of people significantly increased. This was the turning point and they are now intelligently using the opportunity to establish a new arena for expressing cultural identity.

The new era of Indonesian democratization in 1998 came as an opportunity, along with the demand to fulfil the global market for tourism. On this basis, the Kasepuhan started to abandon the confrontational and returned to the accommodative strategy by focusing on cultural tourism. They considered that the confrontational strategy was ineffective, so started to reduce their engagement with the AMAN network. The strategy led the community to openly begin conducting various rituals and ceremonies that were accessible to outsiders. Interestingly, the people refuse to categorize this as "tourism" nor to consider Ciptagelar as a tourism destination. "We are not promoting tourism; instead, we are maintaining our culture and tradition. But if people come as a tourist, they are welcome", one elite member emphasized during the Seren Taun harvest festival.

In the last few years, the biggest harvest festival, Seren Taun, has become a popular tourist attraction, attended by both domestic and foreign visitors. Its promotion can be easily found on the internet, social media, and from government offices, including the national park website. Interestingly, within the uncertain relationship with the national park authority, the people built two traditional guest houses that can be used by national park officers when they visit Ciptagelar. This is the ultimate evidence of the accommodative strategy in using tourism as its medium. In a similar vein, Kasepuhan Ciptagelar also serves as a perfect arena to fulfil a "root syndrome" for the young Sundanese living in the cities. Recently, I met some young Sundanese from Jakarta, who came to form new ties with “the original Sundanese” represented by the Kasepuhan. They wore traditional Sundanese clothes and carefully listened to a story from local people about the history of the legendary Sundanese king, Siliwangi.

The trajectory of tourism in Ciptagelar started in the 2000s during the era of the former leader, Abah Anom. He was recognized as a spiritual advisor and had a wide range of networks, so many guests visited the area to meet the abah. After completing the ngalalakon from the Ciptarasa area to the current Ciptagelar in 2001, the harvest festival was opened up to the public. This directly triggered the rise in the number of people coming to Ciptagelar, not only for spiritual purposes, but also to enjoy its natural and cultural attractiveness. The second period was marked by the effort of the new leader, Abah Ugi, to continue in 2007 to use tourism as a basis for maintaining better networks with other parties. Moreover, the new leader, who is familiar with modern electronic devices, even strategically employs tourism as an arena for exposing Kasepuhan identity to wider audiences through publicizing the harvest festival and daily activities. Since the 2010s, weekly visits can total 50 people, and the harvest festival in 2019 was attended by more than 1000 visitors, who stayed in Ciptagelar. Local and national politicians have also started to consider Kasepuhan Ciptagelar in terms of its political capital, and have regularly visited cultural events to connect themselves with the crowds. In a similar vein, through the intensive engagement with tourism, people in Ciptagelar had confidently started to declare that they have a different way of practicing Islam. Ki Absor argues that people also need a normal life, and tourism provides the best way to achieve this without devastating forests and local beliefs inherited from the ancestors. This explains why tourism is seen as a promising choice, while continuing to refuse to declare Ciptagelar as a tourism area, but as an adat one.

On the one hand, tourism has motivated the community to produce strategies to adapt to external forces (Holder et al., 2022), as emphasized by Robertson (1995) with the term “glocalization”. On the other, it has also brought about various changes. Longchar (2014) argues that commercially-oriented tourism is one of the most popular instruments of globalization but potentially does not pay sufficient respect to life, culture and the environment. In addition, Cohen (2013) emphasizes that tourism, as a popular vehicle for globalization, has led to the elimination of barriers. It has also inevitably brought various changes to Ciptagelar. A local person, A (pseudonym) secretly criticized the leader for being too busy with his laptop, rather than building a close interaction with his people. Another young man, B, openly criticized Commented [SG65]: reference needed?

Commented [NW66R65]: It's from the interview, Ki Asor is a local people visitors who were physically “too close” to Abah Ugi, even hugging him. For the local people, the abah is a respected figure who should be untouchable, but visitors break this rule. He also criticized travel agents who often sell cultural tours to Ciptagelar at high prices, but only give a small percentage to the local people. Finally, he strongly criticized his people who now appear to be money-oriented, considering every activity with the visitors in terms of the amount of money earned.

Nowadays, Kasepuhan uses an in-out strategy to maintain its distinctive identity. The out strategy is conducted by promoting cultural tourism to wide audiences, while the in strategy internally strengthens Kasepuhan identity through the conducting of various rituals to unite its members. Tourism, as a platform of cultural expression, reached its ultimate goal when the provincial government officially declared the area to be one of the major tourism areas in West Java. Moreover, since 2017 a representative of the national park authority has attended the harvest festival, and Ciptagelar has been deemed to be a “special” cultural tourism area in Halimun Salak National Park Area. It demonstrates a strong message: people are settling there legally. In terms of religious practices, having been considered as a valuable tourist attraction, various rituals rooted in local beliefs can be freely practiced, and moreover these facilitate the hegemony of the beliefs over the Islamic influences in the area. This means that tourism has provided a type of political opportunity for the indigenous community to express their cultural distinctiveness and also receive better recognition of its customary land, which is central to maintaining its culture.

E. CONCLUSION

Borrowing from James (2010), the foundation of this study is the effort of people from the ‘peripheries’, represented by the effort of Kasepuhan Ciptagelar to preserve their cultural identity. Kasepuhan has not been passive in dealing with external forces, but has actively developed daily strategies to survive, including using tourism as a basis for this. In the last few decades, in terms of freedom Kasepuhan has been denied the possibility to practice its local beliefs and shut off from its ancestral land by the establishment of the national park. Accepting Islam as the formal religion, but limiting its values in daily life and favoring tatali paranti karuhun, is the accommodative strategy for dealing with the Islamic majority groups. Interestingly, nowadays Kasepuhan has arrived at the point of engaging with tourism to obtain greater recognition of its cultural practices. Consciously taking tourism as its avenue, Kasepuhan Ciptagelar has resisted colonial power, the modern state and the dominant role of the majority religious group throughout its history. In a similar vein, with the valuable natural and cultural resources that are needed to support tourism development in the area, various rituals rooted in tatali paranti karuhun can be freely performed. Moreover, in terms of land issues, people in Kasepuhan are no longer considered illegal settlers within the national park boundary. Therefore, this demonstrates the fact that Kasepuhan Ciptagelar is not powerless; conversely, it has achieved hidden productivity in dealing with the external forces through tourism.

Bibliography

- Abdullah, M. (2012). Green vision in the wisdom of Islamic Law tradition. Ibda': Jurnal Kebudayaan Isla, 10(1), 30–46.
- Adams, K. M. (2006). Art as politics: Re-crafting identities, tourism, and power in Tana Toraja, Indonesia. Honolulu. University of Hawaii Press.
- Adams, V. (1996). Tigers of the Snow and Other Virtual Sherpas: An ethnography of Himalayan Encounters. Princeton. Princeton University Press.
- Aly, H. (2015). Islamic Law in the Worship and Custom. IBDA': Jurnal Kajian Islam Dan Budaya, 13(2), 97–111. <https://doi.org/10.24090/ibda.v13i2.664>
- Beckmann, F. V. B., & Von Benda-Beckmann, K. (2011). Myths and Stereotypes about Adat Law: a Reassessment of Van Vollenhoven in The Light of Current Struggle Over Adat Law in Indonesia. Bijgraden Tot de Taal-, Land-En Volkunde (BKI), 167(2/3), 167–195.
- BPS (2020). Provinsi Jawa Barat Dalam Angka. <https://jabar.bps.go.id>. <https://jabar.bps.go.id/publication/2020/04/27/cfab9a400cf304f800182a5f/provinsi-jawa-barat-dalam-angka-2020.html>
- Buzinde, C. N., Manuel-Navarrete, D., & Swanson, T. (2020). Co-producing Sustainable Solutions in Indigenous Communities through Scientific Tourism. Journal of Sustainable Tourism, 28(9), 1255–1271. <https://doi.org/10.1080/09669582.2020.1732993>
- Carr, A, Ruhanen, L., & Whitford, M(2016). Indigenous People and Tourism: the Challenge and Opportunities for Sustainable Tourism. Journal of Sustainable Tourism, 24(8–9), 1067–1079.
- Chakim, S. (2022). A Review of Rituals and Local Wisdom of Indigenous Peoples in Indonesia. IBDA': Jurnal Kajian Islam Dan Budaya, 20(2), 181–199. <https://doi.org/10.24090/ibda.v20i2.6439>
- Cohen, E. (2013). Globalization, Global Crises and Tourism. Tourism Recreation Research, 37(2), 103–111.
- Curtin, N., & Bird, S. (2022). “We are reconciliators”: When Indigenous tourism begins with agency. Journal of Sustainable Tourism, 30(2–3), 461–481. <https://doi.org/10.1080/09669582.2021.1903908>
- Dolezal, C., & Trupp, A. (2015). Tourism and development in Southeast Asia. Austrian Journal of South-East Asian Studies, 8(2), 117–124. <https://doi.org/10.14764/10.ASEAS-2015.2-1>
- Dong, T. B. (2020). Cultural Tourism: An Ethnographic Study of Home Stay in Briddim Village, Nepal. The Gaze: Journal of Tourism and Hospitality, 11(1), 10–36. <https://doi.org/10.3126/gaze.v11i1.26612>
- Dove, M. (1985). Peranan Kebudayaan Tradisional dalam Pembangunan. Yayasan Obor

Commented [SG67]: Usually 'References' or 'List of References'.
See comments within individual references

Indonesia.

- Fang, W.-T. (2020). Cultural Tourism BT - Tourism in Emerging Economies: The Way We Green, Sustainable, and Healthy (W.-T. Fang (ed.); pp. 75–101). Springer Singapore. https://doi.org/10.1007/978-981-15-2463-9\_4
- Friedman, J. (2000). Cultural Identity and Global Process. Sage Publications.
- Gamma, G., Sirait, M., N, R., Soenarto, F., & Nurzaman, B. (2005). History of Land-Use Policies and Designation of Mount Halimun-Salak National Park. Jurnal Manajemen Hutan Tropika, XI(1), 1–13.
- Gedicks, A. (2001). Resource Rebel. South End Press.
- Gray, A. (1997). Indigenous Rights and Development: Self-Determination in an Amazonian Community. England, Bergahn Books Publisher If a book, city: publisher needed.
- Heffner, R. W. (1999). Geger Tengger: Perubahan Sosial dan Perkelahian Politik. LKiS.
- Higgins-Desbiolles, F., Blanchard, L.-A., & Urbain, Y. (2022). Peace Through Tourism: Critical Reflections on the Intersections Between Peace, Justice, Sustainable Development and Tourism. Journal of Sustainable Tourism, 30(2–3), 335–351. <https://doi.org/10.1080/09669582.2021.1952420>
- Holder, A., Walters, G., Ruhanen, L., & Mkono, M. (2022). Exploring tourist's socio-cultural aversions, self-congruity bias, attitudes and willingness to participate in indigenous tourism. Journal of Vacation Marketing, 13567667221124344. <https://doi.org/10.1177/13567667221124343>
- Honey, M. (1999). Ecotourism and Sustainable Development: Who Owns Paradise? Island Press.
- Irianto, S. (2016). Masyarakat Adat Keindonesiaan. Kompas Daily Magazine. <https://law.ui.ac.id/sulistyowati-irianto-kompas-cetak-masyarakat-adat-keindonesiaan>
- James, S. (2010). The Art of Not Being Governed: An Anarchist History of Upland Southeast Asia. NUS Press.
- Kathleen M. Adams. (1997). Ethnic Tourism and Renegotiation of Tradition in Tana Toraja. Ethnology, 36(4), 309–320.
- Koentjaraningrat. (1993). Masalah Kesukubangsaan dan Integrasi Nasional. Gramedia Pustaka Utama.
- Kusdiwanggo, S. (2016). Konsep Pola Permukiman Spasial di Kasepuhan Ciptagelar. Jurnal Permukiman, 11(1), 29–42.
- Li, T. M. (2000). Articulating indigenous identity in Indonesia: Resource politics and the tribal slot. Comparative Studies in Society and History, 42(1), 149–179. <https://doi.org/10.1017/S0010417500002632>
- Longchar, W. (2014). Tourism Industry-An Instrument of Neo-Liberal Economic Project: A Ministerial Challenge. The Asia Journal of Theology, 28(1), 59–69.
- Moniaga, S. (2007). From Bumiputera to Masyarakat Adat: The Revival of Tradition in Indonesian Politics. In D. Davidson, J. and Henley (Eds.), The Deployment of Adat from Colonialism to Indigenism (pp. 275–294). Routledge.
- Mutaqin, Z. Z. (2014). Penghayat, orthodoxy and the legal politics of the state. Indonesia and the Malay World, 42(122), 1–23. <https://doi.org/10.1080/13639811.2014.870771>
- Muttaqin, A., & Noor, N. M. (2022). Local Islam and Javanese Culture Penetration: Muslim Alif Rebo Wage (Aboge) Negotiations in Identity Formation. Ibda': Jurnal Kajian Islam Dan Budaya, 20(1), 110–130.
- Nordholt, H. S. (2007). Bali, Benteng Terbuka 1995-2005: Otonomi Daerah, Demokrasi Electoral dan Identitas Defensive. Pustaka Larasan.

- Peluso, N. L., & Vandergeest, P. (2001). Genealogies of the Political Forest and Customary Rights in Indonesia, Malaysia, and Thailand. The Journal of Asian Studies, 60(3), 761–812.
- Picard, M. (1996). “Cultural Tourism” in Bali: Cultural Performances as Tourist Attraction.” Indonesia, (49), 37-74.
- Putri, S., Sukirno, & Sudaryatmi, S. (2017). Implikasi Putas Mk Terhadap Eksistensi Hutan Adat Masyarakat Yang Tumpang Tindih Dengan Hutan Konservasi Taman Nasional Gunung Halimun Salak. Diponegoro Law Journal, 6(35), 1–22.
- Rich, B. (1999). Mortgaging the Earth: The World Bank, Environmental Impoverishment and the Crisis of Development. INFID.
- Ricklefs, M. (2017). Sejarah Indonesia Modern. Gadjah Mada University Press.
- Robertson, R. (1995). Glocalization: Time-space and homogeneity-heterogeneity. Global Modernities, 2 (1), 25-55 Sage Publications Ltd. Give editor/s if applicable
- Royer, S. De, Visser, L. E., Galudra, G., Pradhan, U., & Van Noordwijk, M. (2015). Self-Identification of Indigenous People in Post-Independence Indonesia: A Historical Analysis in the Context of REDD+. International Forestry Review, 17(3), 282–297. <https://doi.org/10.1505/146554815815982648>
- Ruhanen, L., & Whitford, M. (2019). Cultural heritage and Indigenous tourism. Journal of Heritage Tourism, 14(3), 179–191. <https://doi.org/10.1080/1743873X.2019.1581788>
- Shiva, V. (1998). Staying Alive: Women, Ecology and Survival in India. Zed Book Ltd.
- Spradley, J. (1975). Anthropology: The Cultural Perspective. John Wiley and Sons Inc.
- Subur (2017). Religi Grebeg Sura di Banyumas. Ibda’: Jurnal Kajian Islam Dan Budaya, 15(1), 59–75.
- Topatimasang, R. (2004). Orang Orang Kalah. Yogyakarta. Insist Press.
- Trupp, A. (2011). Exhibiting the “Other” Then and Now: “Human Zoos” in Southern China and Thailand. ASEAS-Austrian Journal of South-East Asian Studies, 4(1), 139–149.
- Tsing, A.-L. (2005). Friction: An Ethnography of Global Connection. Princeton University Press.
- Webb, R. . (1986). The Sickle and the Cross: Christians and Communists in Bali, Flores, Sumba and Timor. Journal of Southeast Asian Studies, 17(1), 94–112.
- Widiyanto, N. (2019). Indigenous Religion Revivalism and Tourism Development in Indonesia and Malaysia (A Study on Kasepuhan Ciptagelar, West Java and Bundu Tuhan Dusun’s Community in Sabah). Universitas Gadjah Mada.
- Widiyanto, N., & Agra, E. (2019). Tourism Development and the New Path of Migration in Sabah, Malaysia. Borneo Research Journal, 13(1), 81–97. <https://doi.org/10.22452/brj.vol13no1.5>
- Widyaningsih, R. (2017). Dimensi Sosial dan Religi Kearifan Lokal Banyumas. LPPM Unsoed.

Commented [SG68]:

Bukti Korespondensi 6: accepted revision and go to publication (8 April 2023)

Arif Hidayat arif19hidayat88@gmail.com via sendinblue.com
to me, Rindha, Suhartapa ▾

Sat, Apr 8, 7:54 AM ☆ ↶ ⋮

Nur Widiyanto, Rindha Widyaningsih; Suhartapa:

The editing of your submission, "Contesting Identity through The Market: Tourism and Indigenous Cultural Movement in Kasepuhan Ciptagelar, West Java," is complete. We are now sending it to production.

Submission URL: <https://ejournal.uinsaizu.ac.id/index.php/ibda/authorDashboard/submission/7781>

Best Regard

Editor in Chief
Ahmad Muttaqin